A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

Lieutenant-Colonel T. TULLY, Commanding 4th Volunteer Battalion East Surrey Regiment, 20, Bucklersbury, E.C.

At a Meeting of the Trustees of the Imperial War Fund (of which Her Majesty the Queen is Patron), held on the 21st of November, 1899, at the Banking House of Messrs. Cox & Co., the Earl of Wemyss and March presiding, it was decided that a notice should be sent to the Press to the effect that the Imperial War Fund was prepared to deal at once with all cases of distress caused by the death of any soldier, sailor, or marine, as the result of either wounds or disease contracted during the South African Campaign.At the commencement of this war the Imperial War Fund had about 4,600l. in hand, being the balance of capital and accumulated interest remaining over out of the subscriptions for the Egyptian Campaigns of 1882 and 1885. This is now being rapidly reduced. The Fund has paid out over 3,800l. on South African account, the widows relieved numbering about 250, and mothers who are also widows about 100.The grant of 10l. to each widow made by the Imperial War Fund is supplemented by further grants when required from the Daily Telegraph Fund on receipt of Verification Form. Invalided N.C.O.'s and men are assisted when discharged from hospital by the Imperial War Fund, further permanent or temporary assistance being rendered by Lloyd's Patriotic Fund in all deserving cases. With Lloyd's and the Daily Telegraph the Imperial War Fund is acting in friendly co-operation.The main object of the Imperial War Fund is to give that immediate assistance which long experience enables it to do with confidence, through the proper military channels.Officers Commanding all Military Districts and all Mayors of Towns in Great Britain and Ireland have been furnished with the necessary forms of application, and also with particulars of all cases relieved up to date. Lloyd's Patriotic Fund and the Daily Telegraph Fund also receive the same information. This is to prevent unnecessary duplication of relief.

Applications by wives of soldiers serving should be made to the Local Branches of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association.

Any information, together with balance-sheet and all necessary application forms, can be obtained on written application to the Hon. Secretary,

COMMISSIONERS FOR THE PORT OF RANGOON.

NOTICE.—The Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon require the services of a Royal Naval Officer (on active service) of the rank of Lieutenant of eight years' seniority at least, or of an officer of the Royal Indian Marine of similar standing, to undertake the duties of Deputy Conservator of the Port.

A thorough practical knowledge of Hydrographical surveying is an absolutely indispensable requirement in the officer holding the appointment, as he will have personally to carry out periodical surveys of the Rangoon River and its approaches, with the help of a native assistant, to whom he will be expected to impart instruction in any part of the latter's duties in which he may find his training defective.

The principal duties of the officer appointed will, however, be the control of the pilots and harbour-masters, the buoying and marking of the river, the berthing of the shipping, &c., &c.; in other words, the Marine Executive control of the Port, under the Commissioners. In these duties he will have the help of the Assistant Conservator, a certificated and experienced master in the Mercantile Marine.

The salary of the appointment is Rs. 800 a month, rising in four years to Rs. 1,000 a month, by annual increments of Rs. 50 for approved service. This rate of pay is inclusive of house allowance and all other allowances except exchange compensation allowance. The officer appointed will be required to live as near the river as possible.

Applications, stating particulars of service, experience, and age, should be addressed to the undersigned so as to reach Rangoon on or before May 1,

Chairman, Port Commissioners.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE invasion of the Free State in force by Lord Roberts has had an effect almost electrical. In addition to raising the siege of Kimberley it has, as we fully anticipated, automatically relieved the pressure on the British positions in both the eastern and southern portions of the theatre of war. So far-reaching has been the effect that for some days the centre of interest again shifted to the Tugela, whence news may now at any time come that Ladysmith has been relieved. Meanwhile, since the 16th inst., an almost uninterrupted struggle has been proceeding between the armies of Lord Roberts and General Cronje, the latter forced into laager and standing fiercely at bay on the hills of Paardeberg, thirty miles south-east of Kimberley. On October 11 the war commenced. Since that day four weary months passed marked by fitful successes alternating with painful reverses to the scattered British forces. On January 10 the arrival of Lord Roberts and Kitchener at Cape Town was welcomed with acclamation as the herald of better things. We have not been disappointed, although a most difficult situation had to be faced. It was a herculean task which Lord Roberts undertook, but a month sufficed for its accomplishment, as on February 10 the reorganised forces 50,000 strong lay between Modder River Camp and Enslin ready for immediate advance. The morning of the 11th saw the advance begun.

As we write Bloemfontein is the first objective of the western army, Ladysmith that of the army of Natal. On Monday while Lord Roberts at Paardeberg, twenty-five miles north-east of Jacobsdal Camp, and flanking the direct road to the Free State capital, was still engaged with Cronje's forces, Sir Redvers Buller assaulted and captured Hlangwane Hill, commanding Colenso and searching the Boer positions north of the Tugela. In the operations leading up to this advantageous situation there has been abundant evidence of concerted action. On the 14th inst., while the powerful cavalry force under General French was sweeping round the rear of Magersfontein, driving in the enemy and capturing his laagers, and while three British infantry divisions, following the route so brilliantly opened for them by the distinguished cavalry leader, were engaged in seizing the drifts of the Riet and the Modder, Sir Redvers Buller was co-operating, 300 miles away, by commencing operations against the enemy's positions lying east of Colenso and south of the Tugela. On that day Hussar Hill was taken and the camp of the British general established upon it. This hill, which approaches the Inhlawe range, is not shown on the maps, and the name given to it has probably been lately adopted to mark some local incident. The three days that followed were occupied chiefly in shelling the enemy's position from the hill that had been taken, preparatory to an advance in force on Monte Cristo, the dominating point of the Inhlawe hills. The attack on Monte Cristo was delivered in force on Sunday with three infantry brigades and a cavalry brigade by a simultaneous advance on three sides, Brigadier Norcott's brigade (4th) operating against the west, General Hildyard's (2nd) against the south, and General Barton's (6th) against the east, while the cavalry stretching further away to the east swept round the enemy's extreme left flank as far as the banks of the Tugela. The day closed with the capture of the position and the hurried retreat of the routed Boers across the river, abandoning laagers, ammunition, and stores.

The capture of Hussar Hill and Monte Cristo gave General Buller commanding points for guns to bear on Hlangwane Hill, the key to the enemy's main position beyond the river on Grobler's Kloof, and on Monday a successful assault on Hlangwane was made by the Fusilier Brigade. On Tuesday morning the rest of the force advanced towards the Tugela. Colenso was found to have been evacuated, and was occupied by the brigade of General Hart, who after encountering a slight resistance from the rear guard of the Boer forces which appeared to be in full retreat, pushed his advanced guard to the northern bank. On Wednesday Sir Charles Warren's 5th Division crossed the Tugela by a pontoon bridge—at what point we are not informed—and drove back the enemy's rear guard, the naval 12pr. silencing all the Boer guns. The head of Sir Redvers Buller's column was then within ten miles of Caesar's Camp, the main bulwark of the Ladysmith garrison to the south. A strong position still lay in front on the Asvogelkrantz Hill, a place not shown on the maps, barring the way between Colenso and Ladysmith. It commands the railway to Nelthorpe and takes the Boer position on Bulwane Mountain in reverse.

Meanwhile General Cronje on the road to Bloemfontein is pressed hard by Lord Roberts's army. Hampered by his ponderous train of ox-drawn waggons the Boer commander has been placed at serious disadvantage, but is stoutly maintaining an heroic defence. To delay the British in their pursuit as long as possible was manifestly his best policy, so that in his rear and in front of the capital a fresh force drawn from the commandos in Natal and Cape Colony might be collected and entrenched to resist our advancing army. The strength of the reinforcements that could reach him cannot well be estimated, but it is surmised that some 10,000 may have been drawn in from Cape Colony and another contingent of equal strength from the Tugela, besides what may be sent by rail from Pretoria. We know that Commandant Botha from Natal assailed the British attacking Cronje on Monday and was defeated. Our advance on Bloemfontein it is clear is to be fiercely contested, and before that point is reached there will probably be many more days of heavy fighting, for the Boer is a determined and a brave foe. The most striking features about the British advance from the western border were the daring character of General French's march, coupled with a celerity that enabled him to cover ninety miles in four days, the arduous and excellent work of the transport, and the fine marching of the infantry. The adroitness and success of General Cronje's retreat from Magersfontein with his cumbrous ox train of 1,000 waggons also merit our admiration. He is reported to have moved out of his impregnable position on the evening of the 15th inst. with all possible rapidity to Rondevaal and Koodoosrand Drifts on the Modder, and to have been overtaken by General Kelly-Kenny near Klip Drift as he was seeking to gain the Bloemfontein road. On Sunday a heavy action was fought. The Boers were attacked in laager by three brigades and the mounted infantry; they lost 800 in killed and wounded, but maintained their ground. On Monday the attack was renewed, and on the following day Lord Roberts, to avoid the heavy loss that an assault on Cronje's position would entail, decided to confine himself to shelling the laager of the Boer general while the troops fell upon the reinforcements arriving to assist him. The result was the dispersion and defeat of the reinforcements with heavy loss. The latest unofficial telegram from Paardeberg, the scene of the struggle, states that the Boer general was surrounded and had asked for a truce of twenty-four hours to bury his dead. As this delay might have been fatal to the issue of the campaign the request was refused, and the battle is being fought out to a finish.

The events that have occurred in northern Cape Colony concurrently with those of greater moment recorded above have been of an entirely subordinate character. The nature of the situation there is distinctly due, however, to the exigencies of the operations in chief. The recent falling back of our advanced posts first from their encircling positions around Colesberg, and subsequently from Rensburg, after the successful tactics of General French for many weeks, occasioned surprise and disappointment. It was not recognised at the time that the activity of the British mounted troops so apparent about Colesberg, and the reported advance of British infantry in overwhelming force to seize Norval's Pont, were intended to draw the Boers from Modder River and Ladysmith, and to concentrate attention on the Orange River. In the success attending this ruse, and in the celerity and secrecy with which General French with his cavalry, and General Kelly-Kenny with his division of infantry were transferred from the north of Cape Colony to Modder River Camp, we must recognise the masterful mind that had been preparing for the successful invasion of the Orange Free State. General Brabant has been doing good service in the disaffected district around Dordrecht, which place he occupied on Sunday. Brisk skirmishing from various points took place on Tuesday between our colonials and a Boer commando still in the neighbourhood of Arundel, but the enemy, who were not more than 1,000 strong, retired on the arrival of British reinforcements. News to the 12th inst. has been received from Mafeking, which is still buoyant and hopeful, and prepared, if necessary, to hold out for another four months. Colonel Plumer's efforts to reach the town are still persevered in, but have not so far been crowned with success. Fighting took place on the 12th inst. between his force and the enemy near Crocodile Pools, where he attempted to carry a Boer fort by storm in a night attack, but failed owing to the insurmountable nature of the defences. In Zululand the flying column of colonial scouts has been reinforced, but the bulk of the Boer force has withdrawn towards Dundee and Helpmakaar, following the tendency to retire now manifest in the Transvaal Army in Natal. The entire withdrawal of the Boers from Zululand is much to be desired in the present temper of the Zulu people, as that warlike race cannot be expected to stand quietly by while their kraals and cattle are looted. In deference to the representations of the resident British magistrates they, as well as the Basutos, have hitherto maintained a strictly passive attitude, but we have it on the highest authority that if native territories are deliberately invaded the natives will undoubtedly rise, and if they do it will be against the Boes, not against us. On the whole, we have every reason to be encouraged at the progress of events in the theatre of war.

THE AUGMENTATION OF THE ARMY.

THE more carefully we look into the details of Lord Lansdowne's scheme for the improvement of our military condition the more we are disposed to regard it with favour, its weak points notwithstanding. It is the second really practical attempt which has been made to bring about an admittedly much-needed increase in our military establishments, the first having been associated with the session of 1898. But the scheme of this year has a great advantage over that of 1898—its provisions are to be put into force at once as a test of the capabilities of our existing system. The augmentation proposed in 1898 was spread over three years. Endeavours are to be made to produce the present increase without delay. It was only, it may be remembered, on Monday, the 12th inst., that Parliament was placed in possession of the Government proposals, yet on the following Saturday, the 17th inst., the Army Order was issued intimating that the twelve new battalions were to be brought into existence forthwith, whilst on Monday last the Royal Warrant was issued authorising the creation of the new Royal Reserve battalions. Prompt action of this kind is so completely at variance with the usual red-tape procedure of Government departments that it cannot fail to meet with the approval of every sensible and right-thinking man throughout the kingdom.

Those who a few weeks ago were denouncing Lord Lansdowne as a dilettante War Minister because, as they said, he had held office for "five years"—he has only been at the War Office for four years, be it remembered—without doing anything to better the condition of our land forces, will now be brought to see, we hope, how groundless and unjust their charges were. Soldiers, fortunately, do not require to be told, for they know how much the Army owes to the present Minister for War, who has done more than any Secretary of State who has ever held office in Pall-mall to improve the soldier's condition and render the military service attractive. He has now gone one step farther, and in obedience to the popular demand has determined to set about the raising, if he can, of a number of the new regiments, batteries, battalions, &c., which are so necessary in order to place our Army in some sort of condition of readiness to take the field in an emergency.

It will be disappointing to the critics of the War Office, perhaps, to find that much-abused department moving as it is doing in the direction of progress; but in face of such commendable activity there ought to be a better understanding than it is to be feared exists between Westminster and Pall-mall. A Minister of Lord Lansdowne's vigour and capacity deserves support. The War Office may fail signally in the attempt to bring the new units into existence, but if it does the fault will scarcely rest with it. The War Office, after all, can only do its best with the material it finds to its hand. It can no more fill the ranks of regiments and battalions than the man in the street, who used to imagine that Pall-mall was responsible for every shortcoming of our Army. Happily for the country the man in the street is now being brought to recognise where the fault really rests for all that is really wrong in our military system. It cannot be too frequently and too forcibly impressed upon the public that the War Office is powerless to produce a strong and efficient Army unless Parliament gives it encouragement and support. But, after what has occurred lately at St. Stephen's still further to shake the public confidence, it is to be doubted whether any good is to be expected from our legislators there assembled until some dire disaster has come to prove more conclusively than ever how much injury is done by party politics. The present was an occasion when it might reasonably have been expected that all parties in the Imperial Parliament would have shown a desire on grounds of patriotism to have assisted the Minister for War to have launched his scheme successfully. It has become, however, so much the custom for certain honourable members to set personal and party interests before everything that not even Lord Lansdowne, who has been such an able and conscientious Minister for War, could apparently command support in a matter of first importance.

The endeavours that Lord Lansdowne is making to raise the establishment of the Army may not, as we say, produce the desired result, but they are nevertheless called for, and in the interests of the Empire it is deeply to be deplored that a better feeling does not exist in the House of Commons. There can be but one ending to the present policy. Soon the good sense of the people of the country will rise in indignant protest against the scandal—for scandal it is fast becoming—of party politics. Already there are indications of deep-rooted dissatisfaction at the general conduct of public business. Once let that feeling assert itself and it will go badly with those who are satisfied to make party the be all and end all of their political existence. The wealth of the country is enormous, and it has to be properly protected. The taxpayers have been brought to realise the risks they run whilst placing the question of national defence in the hands of a body of political buffoons who oppose every measure affecting the defences of the country simply for the sake of opposition, whilst meanwhile the whole continent of Europe is looking on in amazement at the enormity of the farce which is being enacted—a farce the consequences of which the nation will assuredly have to pay, as it deserves to do, a big price for before many years are over our heads. There are few continental journals more friendly to this country, as a rule, than the Tageblatt of Vienna. And what says that paper with regard to the recent debate in the House of Commons? That "it was a disgrace to the British Parliament, and showed the level to which some statesmen will sink even in once respectable England in order to ventilate their political spleen." And again:—

"England is a great and wealthy Empire. . . . Every other great Power has recognised the necessity of introducing conscription, but England calmly ignores the united wisdom of her neighbours, and would have gone on in blissful ignorance of her appalling weakness if the war with the Boers had not shown her how utterly insignificant her military power has become. If England desires to retain her position then she must introduce conscription as the only means of so doing. It is a question of conscription, vastly increased estimates, or national and commercial ruin. There is no mistaking this fact, no evading the responsibilities of the choice. The sooner the Government gives up its half-measures and boldly proposes this only possible solution of the military problem which Great Britain has to solve the better. If radical measures are postponed too long they may be too late."

The Berliner Neueste Nachrichten holds that "England must make up her mind whether she is to continue working with an Army system which is entirely obsolete and altogether unsuitable for the conduct of war on a large scale, or whether she can reconcile herself to the idea of universal service." All continental critics are agreed that we have to face one of two alternatives—either to bring in conscription or double our military expenditure by making service in the ranks really attractive and so raising our available forces to twice their present strength. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman will not countenance conscription. What will he say to largely-increased estimates? It is just possible he may oppose these too; and still, we suppose, he would desire prudent business men to regard him seriously and not put him in the category of the impossible. "We don't want to fight," Sir Henry says, "we want to go on making money and living in amity with all men." When a statesman at the end of the nineteenth century argues in this way—and that statesman an ex-Minister for War—what can the world think?

Army Notes.

True it is that nothing succeeds like success. The moment Kimberley was relieved the whole theatre of war in South Africa—east, west, and south—gave welcome signs of activity. Consequently speculation is now rife as to the possible duration of the war. So far nearly all the predictions made with regard to the Boers have been falsified, but as they were based on ignorance this was inevitable. Predictions based on knowledge of the climate and country are perhaps more likely to prove correct. As in Australia so in South Africa, the year is practically divided into winter and summer, the former of which will begin in another month. Already the grass on the veldt has been dried up by the drought, and there will be no more till next October. Neither Transvaalers nor Free Staters have supplies of fodder to fall back upon, as their system of warfare is devised to secure the utmost mobility. How scarce grass is in the northern Republic during the winter months may be gathered from the fact that the burghers, until they seized part of Zululand, were in the habit of driving their herds into Natal to graze on the sweet grass of the lower veldt. Nor is this all. The Boer is not well constituted to bear cold. Hence all operations in the high altitudes of the Drakensberg are out of the question, so that the commandoes now in Natal are not likely to risk the dangers of holding Laings Nek and Van Reenen's Pass against the British. All the many wars carried on by the Boers against the natives were begun early in October, and if by January their end had not been attained they returned for the winter, beginning a fresh campaign the following season. It will be remembered that President Kruger's ultimatum was delayed on account of the state of the grass, which was not high enough to serve as food for the horses. Already these are in miserable condition; with a bare veldt there will soon be none at all. A Boer without a horse is an unthinkable quantity, and so it is difficult to see how he is to continue the war, or, willing as he might be to postpone further military operations until next summer, he will not be allowed.

If the Empire has cause to be proud of the defence of Kimberley it has equal cause for pride in its relief, notwithstanding the fact that during the past forty years English and colonial troops have performed some notable marches. South Africa has been described by a cynical traveller as a desert with remarkably rich oases scattered over it, and to-day these are parched by the heat. To travel over the heavy sand of the veldt under a broiling sun requires the finest qualities, for cold helps to brace a soldier on the march, heat enervates him. Moreover, his sufferings from want of water are not to be described, and the greyish-yellow shining surface of the sand dazzles his eyes. When to these afflictions are added a dust storm, thunder, lightning, and rain, the cheerfulness and determination of those who followed General French were worthy of admiration.

If Commandant Ferreira, whose death in the field is reported in a recent despatch, was the doughty partisan chief who played a distinguished part in Natal and South Africa in the troubled relations of Dutch, Zulus, British, and natives forty years ago, a very courageous, wily, and able leader has disappeared from the scene of his constant activity. We do not know if he was well treated by our Government or not for his aid in Transvaal difficulties, but it is understood that he complained of us, and it is certain that he rendered Lord Wolseley very efficient assistance in the expedition against Secocoeni. In the assault on the "Fighting Kopje," of which General Sir H. Brackenbury gave a most interesting account a short time ago in Blackwood, Ferreira led the column on the right of our array in person and stormed the heights most gallantly, very much interested in securing some of the chief's fat cattle, and in honour and reward for himself. He was a revival or survival of the old soldier of fortune, and the fear of his name was widespread among the native tribes.

The circumstances connected with the return of Lieut.-Colonel Gough to England from the command of the 9th Lancers on the Modder after the action at Enslin will no doubt be fully investigated, and in justice to a gallant officer who bears a name honoured in the Service and for the sake of the distinguished regiment, from the command of which he has been removed in such an extraordinary manner in the presence of the enemy, we think there should be no avoidable delay in doing so. Meantime it would be advisable to stay the flow of idle and ignorant gossip which has been let loose in the clubs and in society in relation to the matter. Lord Methuen did not send Colonel Gough back to England, nor did he make any charge against him for disobedience of orders nor for any refusal to carry out his instructions in the field, nor for anything else. The day after the battle his lordship simply informed Colonel Gough that he was not satisfied with the manner in which the cavalry were employed in guarding the camp, and he then and there took the extreme step of ordering Colonel Gough to make over the command of his regiment to Major Little and to report himself at Cape Town. Lieut.-General Sir F. Forestier-Walker gave Colonel Gough to understand on his arrival there that he had received no instructions with regard to him. The lieutenant-colonel of the 9th Lancers, placed in a situation as intolerable as it was novel, took passage for England, where he remains awaiting the action of the War Office, before which he laid a statement. In the meantime he has been offered employment by the authorities, but he has not accepted service. It has not been stated in the press accounts of the action that the cavalry Lord Methuen had at his disposal at the action was dismounted and served as infantry, and the charge which Gough delivered was not seen by the general, who was in another part of the field: "The horses were 'dead beat'; I could not follow in pursuit."

Owing to the rapid change which has come over the situation in South Africa, it appears scarcely necessary to cite the various opinions expressed by our foreign military contemporaries, which are nearly all based upon imperfect knowledge or are merely echoes of what has been said by the press at home. The Militär-Wochenblatt, which seems to have abandoned its bitter attitude against us, is occupied wholly with our operations on the Tugela, and the chief fault it finds with us is that we have been ignorant of topography and have attacked where success was scarcely possible. The Belgique Militaire has an article which looks rather foolish since it speaks of the "retreat" of Colonel Pilcher from Douglas as having had a serious effect upon the campaign on that side, with the result, in the view of this critic, that Kimberley was almost in extremis. The Boer raid in Zululand appears to give great pleasure to the Belgique Militaire. But the foreign military papers appear generally to have tired a little in their attempt to describe circumstances in which their opinions have so often proved wrong. Our very excellent contemporary, the Revue du Cercle Militaire, continues to give a useful chronicle of events without comment.

Mr. Wyndham's reply to Mr. Drage a few days ago was a notable announcement. The delegates who are about to visit this country in connection with the Australian Federal Bill are to be invited to give their views on the reorganisation of the Army on an Imperial basis. Here we have distinct evidence that the Government are rising to a great opportunity. However "informal" the proposals of the colonies may be, they yet mark a distinct advance towards unity and the beginning of better things. The colonies have always recognised their obligations in the matter of defence, but advantage has never been taken of it by the home authorities to formulate an acceptable scheme. The truth of the matter is they feared to raise the question of representation, which is the real difficulty in creating an Imperial Army. The colonies will not contribute to the cost of it unless they have also a voice in its control, and the same is true of the Navy. The Government is thus face to face with the grandest opportunity of consolidating the Empire which has presented itself for two generations. The colonies are willing—nay, eager—to accept a share in the burden of defence, and have proved the value of their military services on the battlefields of South Africa. That their whole relations to the mother country have been changed by the war is as clear to them as it is to Lord Roberts, who with the foresight of the soldier and the insight of the statesman raised a colonial division, under a colonial brigadier, and his own body guard among picked men on the spot. What is required now is constructive statesmanship on England's part and a frank recognition of the changed order of things. She has within her grasp a position such as no other Power since time was ever held. Will she let it slip in babble, or will she rise to its responsibilities? Her choice will alter the whole future of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The Queen's letter to the Commander-in-Chief touches a true note. Like all those brief but pregnant messages to her people which have marked the great events of her reign, it appeals to loyalty, a sentiment which is stronger in the breast of the average man than the philosophical school of political thought imagined. That the letter will attract greater attention than a War Office proclamation there is no doubt whatever. The beloved Queen, for whom thousands of soldiers have died in the past, will not appeal in vain to old soldiers who are living. The officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who have served their Sovereign Lady in years gone by will regard it not so much a duty as an honour to give another year's service. The response to Her Majesty's dignified and politic letter should be overwhelming.

The proposal of the Government to form a certain number of battalions composed of ex-soldiers under forty-five years of age of good character is, at all events, an honest endeavour to utilise our dormant resources. The direct invitation of the Queen will do much to secure success, and this appeal will show that Her Majesty considers herself what all soldiers like to consider her as the personal head of the Army. No amount of War Office invitation would have been so promising of success as the Queen's request to her former warriors, whose welfare has always been so dear to her, to rally round her in the present emergency. Sentiment goes far, especially with soldiers and sailors, and these would make great sacrifices to please their beloved Sovereign. Already many hundreds of men have applied to the War Office for instructions, and if popular officers be selected we have no doubt that many thousands will follow the example of the hundreds. Of course out of the perhaps 200,000 men who have served and are under forty-five years of age, enormous deductions must be made for physical disability, for emigration, and for indifferent character. Of the remainder many men hold such good and responsible positions that they can hardly be expected to revert to the comparative discomfort of barracks or camp, even though it be but for a year. In some cases the men themselves might be willing, but their employers might be unwilling to keep their places open for them. Almost all employers have behaved hitherto admirably in this respect, but there is a limit to self-sacrifice, and they might not be disposed to practically give the men in their employment leave of absence for a whole year. Opinions differ very much on this point, but our own conviction is that if the War Office will be content with 25,000 men they will probably get them.

The question of compulsory service has been a good deal to the fore in Parliament this week. Lord Wemyss's motion proposing the revival of the Militia ballot, to which we referred last week, led to a full-dress debate in the House of Lords. The fate of the motion was never in question, but Service members of the Lower House who are in favour of some scheme of modified conscription had hoped that the majority against it would not have been as heavy as it actually was. One effect of the debate and the division has been to cause the abandonment by Major Rasch of his intention to bring in a bill dealing with the question in the House of Commons. There had, of course, been no intention of seriously proceeding with such a measure, it being frankly admitted by its supporters that the time is not ripe for such an innovation. The bill was intended rather as a ballon d'essai, and as such it would have been useful. In view of Lord Salisbury's speech Major Rasch has decided not to proceed with it. Service members, however, are firmly of opinion that the Government will have to submit some far more drastic proposals to Parliament than the temporary measures they have brought forward to meet the immediate situation created by the war. The boom in recruiting will not continue for long after the termination of hostilities unless the conditions of service are still further improved. It would cause no surprise if the Government eventually decide to increase the rate of pay to all branches and ranks of the Army. It is pointed out that while during the past few years the wages of agricultural labourers and of workmen generally have shown a steady advance, there has been no corresponding increase in the pay of our soldiers. Another reform which commends itself to some members is the introduction of some form of short service for officers. This would, of course, effect a revolution in the method of promotion which would have to be closely watched. A simplification of the Army entrance examination is also advocated on the contention that the present course of study necessary keeps many young men out of the Army who would make excellent officers.

The action of the Government in regard to the Royal Patriotic Fund is to be commended. Lord Lansdowne said in the House of Lords the other night that "it could not be denied that there had been a certain amount of dissatisfaction—he did not say that it was well founded—at the proceedings of the Royal Commissioners in recent years." As regards the £250,000 of the Transvaal War Fund transferred by the Lord Mayor, to have expended only £3,000 in relieving 319 widows and 315 children seems a very inadequate proportion in view of the heavy losses which the war has already entailed. Other funds are being distributed much more liberally. The very multiplicity of funds for widows and orphans occasioned by the war supplies evidence of the indisposition of the nation to trust more money to the Royal Patriotic Commissioners. This being the case the Government have been well advised in deciding on the appointment of an independent committee of inquiry to be presided over by that sound lawyer, Lord Justice Henn Collins. The other members will be Lord Northbrook, the Right Hon. William Lidderdale, the Lord Mayor, Mr. Whitmore, M.P., Mr. Robson, Q.C., M.P., the Rev. Cosmo Lang, and Colonel Twynam. The terms of reference are: "To consider with the assistance of the managers of the various charitable funds available for the relief of persons who have served or are serving in the field, or of the families of such persons, how these funds may be distributed with the least waste, and to the best advantage of those for whom they were intended." Here for the moment the matter must rest; but pending the issue of the committee's report there will be no falling off, we trust, in the support which the public have been giving to the several funds for the benefit of the widows and children of our brave soldiers.

Lord Roberts has applied to the War Office for a large number of officers for special service in South Africa in addition to those already appointed, and it is understood that about forty more will be sent out.

It is estimated at the War Office that the call just made by the Queen's Royal Warrant for ex-soldiers between twenty-two and forty-five to re-enlist for twelve months' home service in the Royal Reserve battalions about to be formed will produce about 45,000 men.

The cavalry reserve squadrons from which it is proposed to raise the four new cavalry regiments are those of the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers) at Canterbury, Royal Dragoons at Shorncliffe, Scots Greys at Edinburgh, Inniskilling Dragoons at the Curragh, 10th Hussars at Woolwich, 12th Lancers at Colchester, 13th Hussars at Hounslow, and 14th Hussars at Newbridge. All these regiments are in South Africa.

Official inquiries are being made in Birmingham and other large centres of industry as to what buildings there are available for the permanent accommodation of large numbers of Militia. It is especially desired that a return should be made of all large premises, such as void factories, which may be acquired by purchase or lease. A communication has also been received from the officer commanding the Midland Regimental District at Lichfield asking what accommodation there is in the city for billeting Militia.

An official intimation is published to the effect that: "An instance having recently occurred of an officer on sick leave in England applying for employment on active service in South Africa, the War Office has intimated that the Commander-in-Chief greatly deprecates such requests, as he considers it the duty of officers on sick leave to use every endeavour to regain their health with a view to their returning to their units to resume the duty which their ill-health has thrown on others."

The Junior Naval and Military Club, 96, Piccadilly, will open its doors on Monday next. It has been established with a view of meeting the requirements of the large body of officers who are awaiting election to the older Service clubs. The club-house, which has been newly decorated and furnished throughout, contains a ladies' dining-room on the first floor and a number of bedrooms for the convenience of members, with a lift from the basement to the top of the building.

From all parts of the country reports come showing that the Queen's appeal to her old soldiers is being splendidly responded to, and that the Royal Reserve battalions will be speedily made up after the day appointed for re-enlistment.

The Commander-in-Chief has approved of the arrangements for holding the Bisley meeting of the National Rifle Association this year from July 9 to 21.

Army Personal.

The Prince of Wales will hold a Levée on behalf of the Queen at St. James's Palace on Wednesday, the 7th prox., at two p.m.

A telegram from Calcutta, dated Wednesday, says: "The health of General Sir William Lockhart continues to improve."

Lieut.-General French makes the fourteenth general officer now on the active list who has been promoted to the rank of Major-General on the establishment for distinguished service in the field. The others are: Field-Marshal Lord Wolseley, April 1, 1874, and Lord Roberts, V.C., November 20, 1880; Generals Sir Redvers Buller, V.C., May 21, 1884, Sir William Lockhart, September 1, 1891, and Sir Henry Brackenbury, June 15, 1885; Lieut.-Generals Sir George White, V.C., July 1, 1881, Sir Francis Grenfell, August 3, 1889, Lord Kitchener, September 25, 1896, Sir Archibald Hunter, November 18, 1896, Sir Leslie Rundle, November 18, 1896, Sir Bindon Blood, May 20, 1898, the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, November 16, 1898, and Sir Herbert Chermiside, November 23, 1898.

No general officer comes under the provisions of the Royal Warrant, so far as age and non-employment rules go, in the course of next month, but on April 1 General H. S. Anderson, C.B., I.S.C., and Lieut.-Generals J. H. Hall and G. H. Moncrieff will complete five years of waiting and will have to retire in the event of employment not coming to them in the meantime.

The Rev. J. C. Edghill would in ordinary circumstances have retired from his position as Chaplain-General to the Army on the 8th inst. His decision to retain his appointment until the close of the war in South Africa, as the Secretary of State desired, has occasioned great satisfaction, not alone on account of Dr. Edghill's great popularity, but it settles once and for all the question of his successor, as under no conditions whatever could the vacancy now be filled by an outsider.

Brigadier-General St. J. Michell, I.S.C., has been transferred from the Allahabad to the Rohilkund District, vice Brigadier-General Sir W. Meiklejohn, proceeded on leave.

Colonel H. B. Kingscote, Colonel on the Staff Commanding Royal Artillery at Halifax, N.S., attains the age of fifty-seven on Wednesday next and will be placed on the retired list.

No fewer than six colonels on the active list attain the age limit next month, viz.: Colonels G. M. Fox, A.A.G., at York on March 4; H. Moore, Recruiting Staff, St. George's Barracks, on March 7; J. E. Blundell, late Hampshire Regiment, on March 12; C. P. Temple, D.S.O., A.A.G., Cork, on March 13; H. S. Brownrigg, late Rifle Brigade, on March 18; and G. MacDonald, R.E., on March 21.

The colonels on the Indian establishment who come under the fifty-seven years' rule next month are Colonels M. J. King-Harman on March 1 and C. E. Shepherd on March 22.

Colonel A. Wilkinson, commanding the 19th Regimental District, Richmond, will complete his term of appointment on March 25.

The regimental commands falling vacant next month are those of the 4th Dragoon Guards (Lieut.-Colonel G. D. F. Sullivan) on March 17; 9th Lancers (Lieut.-Colonel B. Gough, extended term) on March 15; 1st Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers (Lieut.-Colonel C. C. H. Thorold) on March 4; and 2nd Batn. King's Royal Rifles (Colonel G. G. Grimwood) on March 18. Colonels Sullivan and Thorold are granted extensions, and Colonel Grimwood, whose battalion is on active service, may be seconded unless other employment has been found for him in the meantime so as not to retard regimental promotion for a longer period, as this is scarcely the time at which to order a good and tried commanding officer from the seat of war.

Colonel J. H. Laye, late of the Scottish Rifles, who has been A.A.G. at headquarters since October 9, 1899, when he was transferred from Portsmouth as a temporary measure, has now taken over the duties of Major-General Sir Henry Rundle as D.A.A.G., and operates in that capacity until further orders.

Colonel E. S. Browne, V.C., commanding the 24th Regimental District, will succeed Colonel G. M. Fox as A.A.G. of the York District with effect from the 4th prox.

Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, the hero of Kimberley, comes of an old Devonshire family established at Peamore, near Exeter. He is a relative of Mr. Justice Kekewich and Sir George Kekewich, the Permanent Secretary of the Education Department. He happened to be stationed at Cape Town when it was decided to strengthen the Kimberley defences by half a British regiment, and he was therefore sent on there with headquarters and four companies of the Loyal North Lancashire, which distinguished corps will be certain to perpetuate the memory of the siege by having in due course the word "Kimberley" added to the honours they now bear.

Colonel J. G. Maxwell, D.S.O., will embark in the Mexican to-day for South Africa on special service.

Colonel H. C. B. Farrant, late Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, A.A.G. Dublin, has been transferred in a similar capacity to Army headquarters as a temporary arrangement.

Lieut.-Colonel G. F. Davidson, Recruiting Staff Officer, Birmingham, has been appointed Chief Recruiting Staff Officer in London with the rank of Colonel, vice Colonel H. Moore, who is about to be placed on the retired list.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel H. S. Walker, Scottish Rifles, has joined the Intelligence Department at headquarters as an attached officer.

Major J. F. Daniell, R.M.L.I., who has been an instructor since January, 1898, succeeds Colonel L. G. Fawkes, R.A., as Professor of Military Topography at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

Captain H. A. L. Tagart, 15th Hussars, has been appointed Brigade-Major to Major-General Dickson, C.B., who assumes command of the 4th Cavalry Brigade in South Africa.

Captain E. H. W. Stafford, R.E., is appointed an Instructor in Fortification and Geometrical Drawing at the Royal Military Academy, vice Major B. R. Ward, R.E., who has become professor.

Captain A. D. Furse, late of the West India Regiment, will read a paper at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Friday next at three p.m. on "Artificial Cover for Troops in the Field."

Lieutenant R. B. D. Blakeney, R.E., D.S.O., Sub-Inspector of the Traffic Department of the Egyptian Railway Administration, has been telegraphed for by Lord Kitchener, and will proceed as soon as possible to the Cape.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

SUMMARY OF THE WAR.

Saturday, Feb. 17.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to the Secretary of State for War:—

"Jacobsdal, Feb. 17, 5.50 a.m.

"Kelly-Kenny's brigade captured yesterday 78 waggons laden with stores, two waggons with Mauser rifles, eight boxes full of shells, 10 barrels explosives, and large quantity of stores, all belonging to Cronje's laager, which was still being shelled by our artillery when Lord Kitchener despatched the messenger."

Telegraphing to the Lord Mayor his lordship expressed his delight at the behaviour of the City Imperial Volunteers at the taking at Jacobsdal, they having been in the forefront of the battle under Col. Cholmondeley, and behaved with great gallantry.

Sunday, Feb. 18.

Brig-Gen. Brabant reoccupied Dordrecht, the Boers taking to flight. Gen. Brabant, with the colonial division of his mounted troops, first occupied the hills to the south. Finding rifle fire ineffectual he decided upon a night attack, and the enemy were driven out at the point of the bayonet. Our losses were eight killed and four wounded.

The special correspondent of the Daily News, in a telegram from Modder River sent off during the morning, said:—

"The whole of the enemy's force, under the command of Cronje, is now in flight. The suddenness of our appearance seems to have astounded the enemy and thrown them into a state of panic. All their positions were hurriedly evacuated, and the big guns at Magersfontein and Kimberley left. Cronje moved his transport, consisting of many hundred waggons, along the bank of kopjes north of the Modder towards Koffyfontein. Their transport got past our mounted infantry, but owing to weariness had to stop. Our artillery immediately opened on it. The main body of the Boer force kept up a running fight the whole day, vainly trying to escape. Each time their advanced guard advanced, our mounted infantry galloped round and checked them."

Monday, Feb. 19.

Telegram received at the War Office from Sir Redvers Buller:—

"Chieveley Camp, Feb. 19.

"I yesterday moved round the enemy's flank. The Queen's, who had bivouacked on the northern slope of Gingslo, crossed the nek, and, supported by the rest of the 2nd Brigade under General Hildyard, assaulted and took the southern end of Monte Cristo, the 4th Brigade on the left slope, the western. The Royal Welsh Fusiliers, supported by the rest of the 6th Brigade, assaulted the eastern flank of the enemy's position, while the 2nd Brigade of Cavalry on the extreme right watched the eastern slopes of Monte Cristo, and drove back those of the enemy who went there to escape from our artillery fire. Assaulted by a heavy artillery fire on their front and flank, and attacked on their flank and rear, the enemy made but slight resistance, and abandoning their strong position, were driven across the Tugela. I have taken several camps and wagon-load of ammunition, and several of stores and supplies, and a few prisoners. The weather has been intensely hot, and the ground traversed exceedingly difficult. The energy and dash of the troops have been very pleasant to see, and all have done well. The work of the irregular cavalry, the Queen's, the Scots Fusiliers, and the Rifle Brigade was perhaps most noticeable, while the excellent practice of the artillery and the naval guns and the steadiness of the gunners under, at times, a very accurate fire, was remarkable. The accurate fire of the naval guns from Chieveley was of great assistance. Our casualties are not, I think, heavy."

Writing from Jacobsdal yesterday evening Reuter's correspondent said:—

"Gen. French's march deserves to be reckoned as one of the finest ever made. The mounted troops and horse artillery in four days covered a distance of 90 miles, fought two small engagements, and finished by relieving Kimberley. The rapidity of their movements helped to solve one of the problems of the war, and will enable us now to disregard Boer entrenched positions wherever the country permits of cavalry movements. The whole movement was made up of different combinations, all of which dovetailed exactly, in spite of several obstacles which it was impossible to foresee."

"Early on the 11th the concentration of French's division began, and it was completed on the same day at Ramdam. As the infantry appeared in sight early next morning Gen. French moved forward and seized two drifts on the Riet. Gen. Tucker's division followed, doing a splendid march, while close behind came Kelly-Kenny's division. Both of these divisions arrived at the Riet before Gen. French left. The drift was almost impassable for the transport, which was obliged to park on the south side of the river. It was found impossible for a team of mules to draw its load up the steep north bank, and it therefore became necessary to run relays of oxen, which were hitched on in addition to the mules, and thus the loads were dragged over all through the night in the midst of a terrible dust storm. At four o'clock next morning most of the transport was on the north side of the river. Unforeseen delay in the advance of the columns had occurred, but the magnificent work done by the transport service overcame all difficulties."

"Lord Kitchener accompanied Gen. Tucker's division, which marched to within three miles of Jacobsdal, being obliged to keep to the river on account of the water. Here the division stayed till the arrival of Gen. Kelly-Kenny, who then moved straight towards Klip Drift on the Modder. Gen. French was awaiting the infantry there, and left for Kimberley immediately on the arrival of the division. Lord Methuen was opposite Magersfontein and Gen. Tucker held Jacobsdal, with Gen. Colville's division close at hand, ready to move wherever required, and Gen. Kelly-Kenny holding the Klip and Rondevaal drifts on the Modder. Gen. French had meanwhile arrived at Kimberley. Gen. Cronje had thus been completely outflanked, and the position of the Boer army at Spytfontein was untenable. Starvation or retreat was the only alternative. The Boer general chose retreat, but we are still uncertain whether it is his whole force which is retreating by way of the Modder to Bloemfontein, or only a portion of it while the rest is going away to the north of Kimberley. According to the latest reports Gen. Kelly-Kenny is pressing hard on Cronje's rear guard, following him, and harassing his retreat. A big gun, said to weigh 29 tons, is supposed to be still in the neighbourhood of Kimberley, unless the Boers have been able to move it with them in their retreat."

"There are three striking points to be noted in connection with the movements, namely, Gen. French's mobility, the efficiency of the transport arrangements, and the splendid marching of the infantry. So far the relief of Kimberley has not cost us 50 men. The transport arrangements have been above praise. The long marches were made across deep sand without water. Progress was necessarily slow, and four divisions had to be fed while they were cut off from their primary base. Added to all the work of the day was the duty of issuing stores during the night, so that the transport officers toiled continuously and sleeplessly. This they did with the utmost cheerfulness."

Tuesday, Feb. 20.

Lord Lansdowne, midst cheers, read to the House of Lords a telegram from Sir Redvers Buller:—

"Given in at Blowsfarm Feb. 20, 4.10 p.m., received War Office 3.44 p.m., sent out for delivery 3.45 p.m."

"The Fusilier Brigade yesterday took Hlangwane Hill, the right of the enemy's position, and commanding Colenso, the rest of the force advancing towards the Tugela this morning. The enemy had withdrawn all his troops north of the Tugela, and has practically evacuated Colenso. Today Hart has occupied Colenso after a very slight resistance by a weak rear guard, and we hope (hold) the line of the Tugela on the south side from Colenso to Eagle's Nest. The enemy seem to be in full retreat, and are apparently only holding a position which they occupy across the Colenso-Ladysmith Railway, where it is close to the angle of the Tugela, with a weak rear guard. Gen. Hart's advance guard is crossing at Colenso. Our casualties yesterday and to-day have, I hope, been few.—BULLER."

Wednesday, Feb. 21.

Thursday, Feb. 22.

Lieut.-Col. Page-Henderson with a squadron of Inniskilling Dragoons and two guns made a reconnaissance from Arundel to-day westward to Mooifontein Farm on the direct road between Colesberg and Hanover. He got close up to the Boers in the hills and was fired upon, but quickly getting his guns into position he shelled the hills and eventually drove out the enemy. The Boers retired northwards. They came under the fire of two other guns supported by a company of Australians near our western post on Dragoon Hill. Col. Page-Henderson proceeded to Mooifontein and now occupies it. Our patrols from Hanover road came out as far as Mooifontein.

The Boers are reported to be recrossing the Orange River into the Free State in large numbers, "all being most anxious to return to their farms and make peace, if only their leaders will give up what is regarded as quite a hopeless enterprise."

Friday, Feb. 23.

Up to the hour of going to press the latest news was contained in a telegram from Lord Roberts, issued from the War Office yesterday, in which his lordship said that he was satisfied by a careful reconnaissance in force of the enemy's position that he could not assault it without a very heavy loss, which he was most anxious to avoid. Accordingly he decided to bombard Gen. Cronje with artillery and to turn his attention to the enemy's reinforcements, which were rapidly arriving. The result was that the Boers were driven off in all directions, losing a good many killed and wounded and about 50 prisoners, who stated that they arrived from Ladysmith two days previously by railway.

This telegram was sent by Lord Roberts from Paardeberg at six o'clock on Wednesday morning. According to the parliamentary correspondent of the Daily News (Mr. H. W. Lucy), the telegram as published was not exactly as received. "Lord Roberts's telegram from Paardeberg was," says Mr. Lucy, "to use Mr. Wyndham's delicate phrase, 'reviewed' before it was read in the Lords by the Prime Minister and in the Commons by the First Lord of the Treasury. I am informed by one who has seen the text of the original despatch that in the versions read it is considerably toned down. According to my informant, Lord Roberts's message conveys the impression that Cronje is held as in a vice, that his reinforcements are dispersed, and that British reinforcements are steadily coming up."

That Gen. Cronje was indeed held in a vice is evident from a wonderfully graphic message sent by Reuter's special correspondent from Paardeberg Camp on Tuesday evening. This correspondent describes the fight on Sunday, and proceeds to show how the Boer position was completely surrounded by the British forces during Monday. During that day Gen. Cronje asked for an armistice, which Lord Kitchener absolutely refused to grant. Thereupon Gen. Cronje intimated that he was ready to surrender, but on Lord Kitchener proceeding to the Boer laager he was informed that it was all a mistake, and that the Boers would fight to the death. Lord Roberts, who had reached the British headquarters, nevertheless gave the Boers every chance to surrender. This they did not do, and on Tuesday afternoon a fearful bombardment was opened upon the Boer laager. The wonderful pluck of the Boers in withstanding the rain of lyddite, shrapnel, and common shell—over 50 guns pounding away at a space not more than a mile square—evoked great admiration among the British troops. At nightfall on Tuesday the bombardment temporarily ceased, and the wearied soldiers sank to rest.

In concluding his account, Reuter's correspondent says:—

"I am writing in the middle of the sleeping camp. Not a sound disturbs the heavy slumber of the tired soldiers. Down in the river-bed not a fire is to be seen, not a cry heard. There is something tragic in the stern resistance which Cronje is hopelessly offering. It is impossible not to admire his pluck, but all condemn the wickedness of uselessly sacrificing the lives of his brave followers."

Speaking of the situation on Tuesday night the correspondent says:—

"This (Tuesday) is the third day of Cronje's imprisonment and stubborn resistance. Early in the morning the infantry engaged the enemy in the bed of the river, driving them back a short distance. The morning sun disclosed the Boers working like ants on their entrenchments round the laager. A few shells were fired to prevent them going on. Most of the day passed quietly. We heard Gen. French's artillery to the east, presumably engaging the Boer reinforcements. Every opportunity was given to the enemy to surrender, but when towards the afternoon they still gave no sign of doing so Lord Roberts determined to crush Cronje's resistance once for all. On the south bank he placed in position, at a range of 2000 yds., the 18th, 62nd, and 75th Field Batteries and two naval 12prs.; and on the north bank, enfilading the whole of the river-bed, the 65th (howitzer), 76th, 81st, and 82nd Field Batteries and three naval 4in. guns. Then followed the most wonderful scene it has ever been my lot to witness. Once before, in Thessaly, I have seen 110 guns in action, but never such a number of powerful guns concentrating their fire on a spot about a mile square. The lyddite shells raised great clouds of green smoke which filled the bed of the river, where shrapnel burst along the edge of each bank, except for a small space where the proximity of our infantry would have made the artillery fire dangerous to them. Our shells searched every bush and every ravine on the river banks."

Major-Gen. MacDonald has been wounded in the foot, but not very severely. It is hoped that he may ere long be able to return to the duties of his command.

An official list reaches us too late for publication giving the names of the rank and file killed in the fighting at Paardeberg Drift last Sunday. Altogether 147 men were killed. The 2nd Seaforth Highlanders had 35 killed, the Canadian Regiment 18 killed, the 1st Yorkshire Regiment 17 killed, the 1st West Riding Regiment 15 killed, 2nd Black Watch 13 killed, and 2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry 11 killed.

The Boers opposing Gen. Buller's advance on Ladysmith have retreated from Colenso to Pieters, the next station on the line of railway. Here they are under the Boer guns at Bulwana, and it is the position, if they intend to fight again, as it is believed they will, where a stand will probably be made. Their position is stated to be a strong one.

The War Office last night issued a detailed list of the casualties of the war up to Saturday last. The total shows 136 officers killed, 396 wounded (of whom 29 subsequently died), and 171 missing; and 1,273 rank and file killed, 5,273 wounded (of whom 239 are since dead), and 2,446 missing or prisoners.

A list of deaths in Ladysmith between Saturday last and Wednesday has been forwarded to the War Office. Thirty-six men have died mainly from enteric fever, one was killed in action, and four wounded. Among the deaths from fever was that of Lieut. G. W. G. Jones, R.A.M.C.

The Mansion House Fund amounted to £711,000. The amount of the Daily Telegraph Fund had been brought up to 2,538,940 shillings, of which £1,443 12s. was received on Thursday.

WOLSELEY, F.M.,
Commander-in-Chief.

The War Office issued on Tuesday a letter addressed by Sir Arthur Bigge to the Commander-in-Chief:—
Osborne, Feb. 17, 1900.

My Dear Lord Wolseley,

As so large a proportion of the Army is now in South Africa, the Queen fully realises that necessary measures must be adopted for home defence.

Her Majesty is advised that it would be possible to raise for one year an efficient force from her old soldiers who have already served as officers, non-commissioned officers, or privates.

Confident in their devotion to country and loyalty to her Throne, the Queen appeals to them to serve once more in place of those who for a time are absent from these islands and who, side by side with the people of her colonies, are nobly resisting the invasion of her South African possessions.

Her Majesty has signified her pleasure that these battalions shall be designated "Royal Reserve Battalions" of her Army.

Yours very truly,
ARTHUR BIGGE.
Field-Marshal the Viscount Wolseley, K.P.,
Commander-in-Chief.

The question of bulk as well as weight should be well considered when selecting a glass for service. Many of the glasses which are now being taken out to South Africa will never be used at all, owing to the nuisance of having a big leather case bumping about on the shoulders. The patent pocket field glass, however, which Messrs. Aitchison, the opticians, have made, will prove one of the most useful accessories which a scout can possess, as it can be carried readily in the pocket, can be brought into use very quickly owing to the system of rapid focus used, and is at the same time more powerful than many glasses three times its size.

FIRST-CLASS CERTIFICATES.—N.C.O.'s and men at home and abroad can be prepared by post for the half-yearly exams. Classes are now forming for March, 1900. Special attention is given to men who cannot attend an army school.—Randall J. Fox (ex-Army Schoolmaster), 368, Acton Lane, London, W.

EXAMS. Important to Examination Candidates. PELMAN'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY TRAINING. The Editor of "Great Thoughts," writes:—"The system appeals to all suffering from weak or defective memory; it is almost indispensable to examination candidates and to the student of languages." Taught by correspondence, the system in no way interferes with other studies. Easily and quickly learned. Prospectus post free.—Address, THE SECRETARY, SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING, 70B, Berners Street, London, W.

The Duke of Cambridge's Own (Middlesex Regiment).

17th Lancers.—Mr. Wyndham, in answer to Mr. Wingfield-Digby, stated in the House of Commons on Tuesday that the 17th Lancers and other regiments of the 4th Cavalry Brigade were short of officers on embarkation for South Africa chiefly because some of their officers were already serving out there. These officers might be ordered to join their units at the discretion of the general officer commanding. Vacancies were being filled up as far as possible by officers of the Reserve, Yeomanry, or other force. In one case three such appointments had been made.

The 3rd (Militia) Batn. assembled on Tuesday at Leicester on embodiment and has proceeded to Ireland and taken over quarters at the Curragh. Lieut.-Col. Lord Braye had left England for a tour up the Nile, but returns to take over command. The battalion is sadly in want of officers, and furnishes another instance of the error of system which gives field officer's rank in the Militia to members of Parliament without seconding them. Such an arrangement is to be deprecated. Brevet-Major Woodward, 2nd Batn., has joined the staff at headquarters for temporary duty.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. White is transferred on promotion from the 2nd Batn. in India to the 1st Batn. in South Africa.

Black Watch (73rd).—Capt. Bald, Reserve of Officers, has been selected for duty with the battalion in South Africa.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—Headquarters and the service companies sailed from Ceylon on Saturday last in the Jelunga for conveyance home. The Ceylon papers are unanimous in saying that the news that the battalion is to leave Ceylon has been received with unfeigned regret. One paper says:—

"From the gallant soldier, Col. Rutherford, who commands the battalion, down to the humblest private, they have not only our good will, but our affection and esteem. They have, during their only too short stay in Ceylon, upheld the most honourable traditions of the British Army, and it must be no little consolation to Col. Rutherford and his officers to have it said that for general good conduct there has never been quartered in Ceylon a regiment which in this particular has surpassed the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Major Tobin is ordered to join headquarters in South Africa from the depôt to assume temporary command. The correspondent of the Morning Post at Sterkstroom writes:—

"It having been arranged that Lieut.-Col. Eagar should be exchanged for Commandant Pretorius, Lieut. Nickerson, R.A.M.C., proceeded to Burghersdorp to bring back the wounded colonel of the Royal Irish Rifles. Col. Eagar had succumbed, however, after a relapse, and died on the morning of the 13th inst. at 8.30. The residents of Burghersdorp provided a handsome coffin, and covered it with wreaths. After a special service had been held, at which the hymn 'Days and moments quickly flying' was sung from specially-printed leaflets, Lieut. Nickerson conveyed the body in a buggy to Molteno Station, whence an armoured train brought it to Sterkstroom. The body was interred this afternoon in the cemetery with impressive ceremony."

Connaught Rangers (88th).—Lieut. Brooke, who was recently severely wounded in action, arrived home from Natal on Monday in the Assaye.

Royal West Kent Regiment (97th).—Headquarters and the service companies left Egypt on Tuesday in the Dunera for England.

Leinster Regiment (100th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Southampton on Friday next in the Kildonan Castle for South Africa.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., which was to have embarked at the Royal Albert Docks on Tuesday for South Africa, did not go on board the Sumatra until yesterday. The Sumatra sailed from the Royal Albert Docks during the evening.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—The official Court Circular of Monday says:—

"Her Majesty this morning saw Bugler John Dunne, 1st Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and presented him with a silver-mounted bugle to replace that lost by him on the field of battle at Colenso on Dec. 15, 1899, when he was wounded. H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg and their Highnesses Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein and Princess Victoria Eugénie were present with the Queen. Lieut. Knox, 3rd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, who was in charge of Bugler Dunne, had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty by Major-Gen. Sir John McNeill, Equerry in Waiting."

The bugle was manufactured specially by Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co., of Berners-street, and bore an inscription: "Presented to Bugler John Francis Dunne, 1st Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, by Queen Victoria, to replace the bugle lost by him on the field of battle at Colenso on Dec. 15, 1899, when he was wounded."

Reviews.

AT SCHOOL AND AT SEA.

This is the title of a genial book, which is further described as giving us "life and character at Harrow, in the Royal Navy, and in the trenches before Sebastopol" (John Murray). The author has chosen the pseudonym of "Martello Tower," and we shall not attempt to penetrate his not very obscure disguise. The purpose of the book is admirably developed in its pages, which are full of most excellent description, and of very racy and characteristic humour. The gallant author is evidently never so well pleased as when recalling the incidents of his boyhood's days at Harrow and in the old ship which he names the Cuba, now, he says, not exactly "to the fore," but still existing as a school-ship in the middle of a potato field, to which she was floated up from salt water by a trench afterwards filled up, thus cutting her off from her native element. But before the author takes his readers on board the Cuba, he has a great deal to say about the régime of Wordsworth and Vaughan at Harrow—the bushy and ineffective birches of the former and the more slim and stinging tools of the latter—about the code of school-boy honour, the fights with the "chaws" or cads, and the achievements of the "swots," who carried off the honours. Fagging in the abstract and the concrete is glorified with a full chapter to itself. At length the time came for joining the Cuba, and there is a most amusing account of the preliminary ordeal under the presidency of a certain captain who, having had fractions as his own personal enemies, cut them out of the examination, while the medical test exacted the ability to eat ship's biscuit and to hop along the ward-room deck, a performance which so amused a listless young officer that he jumped up exclaiming "By jove! what fun! by jove!" In this ship the author traversed a good part of the globe, picking up experience wherever he went, and thoroughly enjoying the life among messmates whom he now most wittily describes. It is a perfect gallery of characters which would do no discredit to Marryat or James Hannay. In short, these chapters are delightful reading, and the accounts of places visited and of things observed are extremely interesting. There is a particularly racy description of the ceremonies observed at the crossing of the line, of which the humour is quite irresistible. Incidentally, the author introduces a valuable unpublished account of the coming of Napoleon on board the Bellerophon—

"And now came the little great man himself, wrapped in his grey coat buttoned up to the chin, three-cornered cocked hat, and hussar boots, without any sword, as probably emblematic of his changed condition. He was received with every mark of respect, but not that due to a crowned head. . . . He showed us what one little human creature like ourselves could accomplish in a span so short. The fire of his intellect communicated like electricity to all around him, and while under its influence men performed actions quite beyond themselves."

The story is told from the narrative of a midshipman of the Bellerophon, who recorded what he saw. But we must hasten forward over many pages that tempt us to pause in order to get up to the service of the author in the Crimea. The experience had largely been in Australian waters, with visits to Fiji and other islands, followed by service on the South American coast, but it was in a ship described as the Olympus that "Martello Tower" went to the Black Sea. In May, 1854, he passed his examination and received his commission as "acting-mate," and he temporarily served as an aide-de-camp. He has a great deal to say about the cholera, and describes the battle of the Alma, which he saw from the poop of his ship. Although he tells us that the sailors sympathised with the sister service in their deprivations, he condescendingly adds that they were, at the same time, of opinion that a little hardship and experience in campaigning would do them a great deal of good. "A genuine man-o'-war's-man was almost as good a soldier as a soldier himself in some things, and a far better campaigner. He was certainly a better hand at knocking about big guns than any artilleryman in all the United Kingdom." There is a very good account of how the naval guns were got up from the ship; the author describes how the utmost emulation prevailed, and how it was scarcely possible to prevent those of another to the great peril of the passers-by of all sorts. The narrative of events in the batteries and the trenches is extremely interesting. "Martello Tower" was just laying his gun, waiting for the flash aside by the lieutenant in command of his sub-mortally wounded. He recalls how, years afterwards, at the launching of a lifeboat at North Berwick, he felt himself gently pushed aside by one who proved to be the holder of a Scottish title to which he had succeeded by the death of the gunner at Sebastopol. The author had striking experiences at Inkerman, Lushington to Mr. Hewitt across an open space of 400 yds. ploughed up by shot and shell of all sorts. A vivid picture is given of the hardships suffered by our soldiers in that terrible winter, and we shall quote what the author has to say about the recent utterances of Admiral Maxse:—

"While rejoicing in the vigorous, straightforward way with which he has dealt with and cleared up several points, notably the splendid services of Sir Edmund Lyons and his relations to Admiral Dundas, I cannot but deplore his virulent attack on the Times and its correspondent. Whatever else may be said, it is certain that to them the nation was indebted for the truth about the state of the Army; without them the real condition of things, in all its dreadful reality, would never have come out. Admiral Maxse, it must be remembered, was on the staff at headquarters. Well do I remember the fortunate young officer, who was an excellent naval A.D.C.; but if he had had a few weeks' experience of real work in the trenches, of a few 'Araba guards,' &c., he might have realised a little more keenly what was really the condition of the Army than he appears to have done. 'How different would have been the tale of Mr. Russell if he had been welcomed as a guest at headquarters,' Admiral Maxse writes. Well, then, I am extremely thankful he wasn't. The question is not: Did Russell and the Times make themselves unpalatable in high places? But: Did they courageously and conscientiously, on the whole, reveal to John Bull the truth? Certainly they did, and, as a servant of John Bull, who served actively afloat and ashore before, during, and after the Crimean War, I repudiate and lament Admiral Maxse's attack."

We have no space to deal further with this admirably instructive book. We leave the author undergoing his course in the gunnery training ship, and finding his name among the successful candidates who became what he calls "full-blown lieutenants." We are extremely glad to see that he only needs an invitation to tempt him into a further record of his experiences, and we have great pleasure in cordially encouraging him once more to take up his pen.

The North American Review for February may be described as a Transvaal number, for it pursues its set of articles upon "The War for an Empire." Lieut.-Gen. John F. Owen, R.A., describes the situation from a British standpoint. He touches upon the political considerations that prevented military preparations on a large scale, the circumstances that determined the holding of Ladysmith and other such matters, and expresses the opinion that it would have been better to carry out the original plan of campaign at all costs, because the other policy has left our strategy up to a recent date under the domination of the enemy. Gen. Owen has a high opinion of the Boer strategy, but he remarks that their advance into Natal, south of the Tugela, lacked dash and determination, and that they fell into errors which were salvation to Lord Methuen. A longer article is by the well-known German military critic, Capt. Fritz Hoening, who discusses the whole of the circumstances, though we are not sure that his views will entirely commend themselves. He begins by assuming that our political attitude had an offensive character, and that our military action did not keep pace with it. He cites Moltke's opinion that we always undervalue our adversaries and accuses us of being thoroughly wrapped up in our belief in professional soldiers, and he asserts that we are ever prone to belittle every army based on universal conscription. All our mistakes are, therefore, attributed to misjudging the political conditions and underrating the enemy.

Capt. Hoening considers that we omitted to take elementary measures of precaution to prevent the Boers overrunning northern Cape Colony. In Natal he thinks we ought to have been prepared to seize the passes via Newcastle (Laing's Nek). As is well known, the northern angle of Natal was abandoned on military grounds, and perhaps Capt. Hoening's opinion is influenced by his belief that we have really contemplated marching upon Pretoria by way of Laing's Nek. It may be observed that there is no evidence that such a plan has ever been entertained. Many hard things are said at the expense of Sir Redvers Buller. "Buller was not content with dividing his forces. He went on to disorganise them, with the result that he found himself ultimately unable to command, at any single point, the needful numerical superiority." On the whole, in the view of this critic, it would have been better to leave Ladysmith to its own resources. An article by an American officer, Major-Gen. Howard, shows considerable prescience in regard to Lord Roberts's strategy, and is very interesting. The number also contains several articles on the rivalry of races in South Africa, including one by Mr. Montagu White on "The Blunders of the British."

Mr. W. W. Greener, the author of several works on firearms, will issue almost immediately Sharp-shooting for Sport and War, to which Mr. Wirt. Gerrard has contributed a preface on the armed civilian and his place in all schemes of national defence.

On the Field of Battle

Bovril is playing a conspicuous part in upholding the British flag and contributing to the success of British valour by assisting in the recovery of the wounded soldiers. Sir Wm. MacCormac, in his interesting report to the Lancet after the Battle of Tugela, graphically pictures Bovril's important share in the campaign, when he writes:

"As each wounded man reached the hospital he was served with a hot cup of bovril, large cans of which were boiling outside the tents."

THE FIRST RESERVE FLEET.

THE order for the ships of the First Reserve to assemble at Portland next Thursday has undoubtedly caused satisfaction throughout the kingdom. The squadron is called together for a month's exercise in gunnery and torpedo exercises, and the Admiralty have announced that the ships will disperse on April 1. In these circumstances the assembling of the home fleet cannot possibly be regarded as a menace by the most susceptible of foreign Powers, although it may with reason be regarded as a precautionary measure which the Government is entirely justified in taking in time of war. In this latter light it will probably be regarded by the country at large. With the departure of the Channel Squadron from its usual station at home, it might be unwise, considering the alarmist tone of a portion of the press, to neglect a precautionary measure which can now be taken without fear of misconstruction. The assembly of Sir C. Domville's fleet might so easily have been misconstrued had the order been given at a more critical time, and might thus have accentuated diplomatic difficulties which are but too liable to arise at the shortest notice. Our openly-avowed naval policy for the protection of the Mediterranean route to the East is perfectly familiar to the world at large. Our so-called Channel Squadron becomes at the first hint of maritime war a strong reinforcement for the Mediterranean fleet, thus giving us eighteen modern battleships in the narrow seas. That policy is sound and is approved by the unanimous voice of the Navy, but it is only rendered possible by the existence of the strong squadron of relatively modern battleships which we hold in readiness for assembly in the Channel at a few days' notice. The country has good reason in the present situation to plume itself upon the readiness of the Navy to face any probable strain. Ten years ago, or even five years, our First Reserve Fleet was far weaker than it is to-day. The Admiralty have systematically strengthened it by the substitution of efficient battleships for those of obsolete type, and the good results of this excellent forethought and wise policy are to be seen and appreciated to-day by all. So far as can be judged, the turn of the tide of war in South Africa has largely decreased the probabilities of attempted foreign interference, but the nation is in no mood to submit to any suspicion of dictation from the Powers with respect to its South African policy or any other political issue. In any case we are prepared, and it is therefore interesting to consider the composition of the British and foreign fleets in northern waters. In the Mediterranean our superiority can be assured by the junction of our Mediterranean and Channel fleets, and given more cruisers, this combined squadron has nothing to fear from the southern fleets of the allies. We assume, of course, that the six Russian battleships confined by treaty to the Black Sea would essay to pass the Dardanelles and effect junction with the Toulon fleet.

That a movement of this importance could be effected by the allies with such secrecy and rapidity as to surprise our admirals in the Mediterranean is highly improbable, and in effect this is the only serious risk we should have to face in the Mediterranean. In northern waters France has six battleships in commission, two of which are of the latest types. This northern squadron must be credited with the usual efficiency of a sea-going fleet, but it could hardly be strengthened without our knowledge. To prevent a junction between this fleet and the Russian forces in the Baltic would thus be the important task devolving upon our First Reserve Fleet, and here there is just sufficient element of risk to justify the strengthening of Sir C. Domville's fleet. This Reserve squadron, consisting of ten battleships, three armoured and one protected cruiser, would not enjoy a sufficiently obvious margin of superiority to render the destruction of the northern fleets of the allies a practical certainty. It is not, we must admit, a homogeneous fleet, consisting as it does of units of widely-differing types, speeds, armaments, two or three of which are especially deficient in speed and coal capacity. The flagship, Alexandra, launched as far back as 1875, still carries muzzle-loaders and is quite unworthy to bear the admiral's flag for that reason. With the exception of the Thunderer, which was launched in 1872, the remaining battleships all date from the eighties, the Colossus and Collingwood, launched in 1882, being the oldest ships of the squadron. The Thunderer, however, despite her age, may be reckoned efficient, since she has been rearmed and re-engined within the past seven years. A stronger flagship than the old Alexandra ought to carry the flag, and we shall have one ready to hand in the Hood, which will shortly be home from Malta with an experienced crew to man her. Unfortunately there is not, at the moment, a single first-class battleship in the home ports wherewith to strengthen either fleet in case of emergency, unless we except the Glory now being fitted as flagship for the China Station. Of battleships of the older types we have plenty out of commission, but these are mostly armed with muzzle-loaders, and require more men than could be spared for such vessels. The Sultan, renovated at enormous cost, may perhaps be ranked as a second-class ship, and she, we note, is being coaled at Portsmouth with some other obsolete vessels. To render the First Reserve Fleet efficient as a fighting force it would have to be supplied with some twenty modern cruisers, a flotilla of destroyers, which is ready to hand, and, as we have said, a newer flagship. The ships, it must be remembered, are only partially manned, and the complements have to be filled up either from the coastguards or from the depôts. In a general way, too, this Reserve squadron is assembled but once a year for exercise in the summer manœuvres, so that a week or two would inevitably elapse before the crews could be perfected in their work, and a preliminary cruise would be essential to efficiency in manœuvring. The manœuvres have taught us beyond the possibility of doubt that a hastily-assembled mass of ships does not constitute a fighting fleet. In modern war the nation that is ready to strike the first blow, whether by land or sea, may be said to grasp the skirts of victory. There is much to be done before our fighting squadrons can be fit to undertake the work which would devolve upon them in the event of war. Until supplied with their proper proportion of "eyes and ears" they cannot be described as completely organised forces.

Naval Notes.

The Naval Estimates will probably be introduced on Monday next, as the sitting on that day is to be occupied in discussing the motions on going into committee of supply. Sir John Colomb will ask the House to declare that, having regard to changes in the constitution of the personnel of the fleet, necessitated by the abandonment of masts and yards, and complete reliance on machinery, it is desirable that the Royal Naval Engineer and Royal Marine branches of the naval service should be directly represented on the Board of Admiralty. Sir Fortescue Flannery also wishes to discuss the status and conditions of service of Royal Naval Engineer officers. One sitting will in all probability suffice for the discussion of these matters, and the House ought to get to the first vote on Tuesday. The circumstance that there is no exponent of the views of the executive branch of the Navy in the House save the official spokesmen, who, of course, have to allow for political influences, must give to these discussions an academical bearing and an air of unreality which considerably detracts from any real value they might otherwise have. More valuable time, too, will probably be wasted in reopening the boiler controversy.

The First Lord's announcement on the subject of the estimates is awaited with some not unnatural apprehension lest recent significant remarks should be found to have concrete expression. We cannot forget Lord Salisbury's reference to the power of the Treasury nor Mr. Goschen's apparent contentment with the Navy "as it is." The demand also for so-called "home defence" seems to demonstrate a want of confidence on the part of the country in its fleet which is of ill omen if, as has happened before, the need for larger expenditure on the Army should mean starving the Navy. The fact that such a large number of persons should be prepared to support heroic measures for supplementing the work of the fleet augurs ill for any real hold which the teachings of the Navy League have upon the people. It is true that this is due partly to ignorance and partly to misapprehension, but the feeling is there nevertheless. Lord Wemyss, in moving his resolution in the House of Lords on Tuesday on compulsory military service, declared that "Naval men wrote and spoke as if the Navy alone was sufficient to protect the country from invasion," and he went on to assert that this was not the use of the Navy, and that if his suggestions were not carried out the power of the Navy would be reduced by reason that a large portion of it would be anchored to our shores in order to prevent invasion. Here we seem to have a most fallacious idea of the purpose of the fleet and of the first principles of national defence. We have never heard of any naval officer who held the opinions which Lord Wemyss ascribes to members of the sea profession. Certainly the late Admiral Colomb, who was the foremost exponent of the views on national defence of what Mr. Wyndham has called "the blue-water school," never did, as his writings and speeches will abundantly prove. What he did hold was that, provided certain land defences and military forces which he specified were supplied, the protection of these islands might safely be entrusted to an effective fleet. Moreover, he strenuously combated the notion that any kind of defence on land could be an equivalent to defence afloat. Had his advice been taken we might not now have been in a difficulty so far as the supply of more trained soldiers for service abroad is concerned, since it was always his contention that the indispensable complement of an efficient fleet was a mobile force to carry out offensive military operations over sea.

That the Naval Estimates will be regarded with a jealous eye and submitted to keen scrutiny and careful criticism goes without saying. It is, however, rather to those critics who are outside the House than to members of Parliament that we shall look for insistence upon a proper recognition of our naval requirements should it turn out that the Government has fallen short of its duty in this respect. Several of the more influential of the London dailies, notably the Times and Morning Post, have spoken out already with a plainness which is very reassuring. The Navy League, too, has issued its manifesto, in which it is asserted that to render our position secure we require at least twenty more battleships and thirty cruisers, with a reserve of seamen not less in number than 100,000. The Navy League, however, and most people, will be contented with something less than this. We have already a very large number of vessels in various stages of construction; altogether something like sixteen battleships and fourteen armoured cruisers. We doubt if it be possible to put more battleships on the stocks at once, unless it be on the Clyde and at Barrow. If, however, the First Lord promised that as the slips and docks at present occupied by battleships were vacated similar vessels should be put in hand, we should feel that he adequately realised the position. There is no reason also why ten more armoured cruisers should not be begun, and this would be much better than tinkering with the ancient craft in the basins at the home ports. Something more than a promise is required, however, as regards the policy of rapid construction which Mr. Goschen has always insisted that he makes his own; we have been drifting for the last two years into a condition characteristic of something very different. There are other matters connected with the supply of colliers, repairing ships, and the like upon which the country will expect to hear from the First Lord. And while he is on this subject it would be well if he were to explain exactly for what nature of stores, and to what amount, the War Office is indebted to the Admiralty for loans during the progress of the war. We have heard, of course, about guns and men, but there are also rumours about lyddite, projectiles, fuses, &c., and it would reassure the public to learn that the supply of these articles for the Navy has been replenished.

With reference to the charge which has been brought against British naval officers at Cape Town, the Daily Telegraph special war correspondent telegraphing on Monday says that "the case against Lieutenant Kennard and Mr. Robert Harris, son of Admiral Sir Robert Harris, for assaulting Mr. William Timbrell, came on before the resident magistrate at Simon's Town this morning. The prosecutor is proprietor of the Simon's Town Chronicle, which reprinted an extract from the Daily Telegraph containing a statement about Admiral Harris's reluctance to afford facilities for the defence of Natal either in guns or men from his ships. The statement was reproduced and later on amplified by the South African Review under the heading 'Mysterious case of Admiral Harris.' The prosecutor quoted it, and the defendants are alleged to have invited Timbrell to Admiralty House, where they read a statement to the effect that the officers of the fleet were indignant at the article, which was scurrilous and full of lies from start to finish, and called for a repudiation and an apology. This being refused, the prosecutor, it is asserted, was compelled to walk to the steps of the adjoining pier, whence Lieutenant Kennard pushed him into the shallow water of the bay, declaring that honour was now satisfied. Evidence to this effect was given, and the case was adjourned for a week, owing to the absence of a witness—one of the three other officers present at the assault. The prosecutor asserted, but no evidence was tendered to prove the allegation, that the admiral was cognisant of the proceedings which occurred at his house. Admiral Harris was present during the hearing."

In connection with a contract entered into by the British North Borneo Company for the construction of a railway sixty miles in length to connect the harbour of Gaya with Brunei Bay, it is pointed out that Gaya and Sapangar Bays have recently been visited by Sir Edward Seymour, in the Centurion, and by Captain Hardinge, in the surveying ship Rattler. At Brunei Bay, as in Labuan, there is fairly good coal, and this fact, taken in connection with the supposed strategic value of Gaya Bay as a naval base, gives to these visits a significance which they may not really deserve. Naturally the Borneo company's officials would like to see the place become a naval base, so that it is not surprising to learn from this source that, "in the opinion of experts, the position of Gaya, its proximity to coalfields which the railway will exploit, its configuration, and the general facilities it affords, render it of far greater strategic importance than Wei-Hai-Wei, which is situated at the extreme end of the trade route to China and Japan, Gaya being in a position to command the most important portion of the China Sea, and, at the same time, afford shelter for our shipping in time of war. The selection of Gaya as a naval base would be a set-off against the French naval base at Saigon, which at present dominates all our trade routes in the China Sea." How a naval base can "dominate" a trade route is not explained.

The new torpedo-boat destroyer Viper, with the special steam turbine machinery, has made a speed of 35½ knots. The vessel is 210ft. long, 21ft. beam, 12ft. 9in. depth moulded, and displaces 350 tons. These dimensions differ little from those of the destroyers fitted with the ordinary reciprocating engines—the displacement is 25 tons more than the heaviest of the 30-knot boats—and it becomes interesting to note, says Engineering, the increase in power for each successive addition to speed. The first boats of 26 knots had 3,200 indicated horse-power at command, then 27 knots required an increase to from 4,000 to 4,200 indicated horse-power. When 30-knot boats were built, it was found that the power had to be 6,000 indicated horse-power; for 32 knots the power had to be close upon 9,000 indicated horse-power, and the turbine-propelled Viper has, it is said, attained her speed of 35½ knots with 11,000 indicated horse-power. In other words, according to our contemporary, the power for 26 knots was 12½ indicated horse-power per ton of displacement; for 27 knots, 15¼ indicated horse-power per ton; for 30 knots, 20 indicated horse-power per ton; for 32 knots, 24½ indicated horse-power per ton; and for 35 knots, 31½ indicated horse-power per ton. There are two shafts on each side of the centre line of the ship, with two sets of compound steam turbines. The arrangement on both starboard and port sides is that the high-pressure turbine drives the outer and the low-pressure turbine the inner shaft. On the inner shaft a reversing turbine is also fitted; it runs idle when the boat is going ahead, and when it drives the vessel astern the forward turbines are idle. The speed astern is 15 knots. On each shaft two propellers are mounted, the after having a slightly larger pitch than the forward propeller. There are thus eight propellers.

In our issue of the 10th inst. we referred to Mr. Goschen's promise of the early publication of the despatches from the commanding officers of the naval brigades at the battles of Graspan and Colenso as soon as the opinions of the general officers in command at those actions had been ascertained. On Monday evening last a non-naval M.P. questioned the First Lord on the subject, and was informed that as important issues were involved the question of publishing them was still under discussion with the War Office. We are sure that delay in their production will in no way be attributable to the Admiralty.

Mr. Winston Churchill, war correspondent of the Morning Post, in his account, published by our contemporary on Saturday last of the action at Spion Kop, states that the question arose as to whether guns could be brought up the hill that the troops had so bravely secured. Artillery officers examined the track and said "No." Two long-range naval 12prs., much heavier than the field guns, had arrived. The naval lieutenant in charge said "he would go anywhere, or would have a try any way. He was quite sure that if he could get on top of the hill he would knock out the Boer guns or be knocked out by them, and that was what he wanted to make sure of." Mr. Churchill believes that the attempt would not have been successful. We regret that the name of the naval lieutenant is not mentioned in the report, but he is undoubtedly an officer of opinions identical with those of the gallant Thornton Bate, captain of the Actæon, 1856-57, who considered that impossibilities are unknown in the British Navy.

The first volume of a new series of the House of Lords manuscripts, 1693-95, is now issued, and includes the dissolution by the King of William and Mary's Parliament, the period having been marked by successive misfortunes to the nation on sea and land, and which was referred to in the Speech from the Throne, His Majesty recommending an inquiry concerning the disasters to the Navy. "The want of cruisers was very manifest at that time." History repeats itself at the conclusion of the nineteenth century. The Mediterranean fleet of eleven battleships has only eight cruisers, while the Channel fleet has eight battleships and nominally six cruisers, but only one of them is with the command. Nelson's cry, "Give me more frigates" (cruisers are the frigates of the present Navy), is still with us, but statesmen ignore the warning note of our greatest admiral and naval strategist.

The Morning Post gives plenty of sea room to a pessimistic contributor who condemns the engineering branch of the Navy in no measured terms. His indictment can carry little weight in this form, though some of his statements are worth attention. The branch is short of officers, we know; whether it is equally short of artificers and stokers may be questioned, and the Admiralty deny that there is difficulty in making up the regulation complements. As regards the lack of officers, it is necessary to consider that well-trained artificers are expected to undertake watchkeeping in the engine-room, and are usually quite competent for this work. Hence if a small cruiser like the Pelorus carries but two commissioned engineer officers, it does not follow that the staff is dangerously weak, though we should prefer to have a larger one in time of war.

NAVAL BRIGADE TOBACCO AND PIPE FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Many of your readers will be glad to hear I have received a letter from Admiral Harris saying: "The first consignment of pipes and tobacco has come to hand. It has been placed in the control of the naval victualling officer here, and through him will be distributed to the naval brigades in due proportion, as well as some to the crews of the cruisers who have hard and arduous duties off Delagoa Bay and no chance to get ashore as their naval brigade comrades have. I think they all will enjoy the kind present you have been instrumental in obtaining for them, and I hope also be grateful."

I have also a letter from my nephew, Commander Horsey, from Modder River, with the naval brigade, and he says: "I have seen in the papers your efforts on behalf of the sailors, and I know they are very grateful for the trouble you have taken. Re non-smokers—they are so few that I do not think anything can be done; not one in 30 do not smoke, and this sort of life teaches the minority to begin." I am awaiting Admiral Harris's advice as to further consignments, as he will know best what, in addition to the £500 worth of stuff he has already received, will be needed in future.

May I be permitted to say that I have also, with the help of only 12 private lady friends, sent out to Admiral Harris for the naval brigades in front, for officers as well as men, 3,500 stamped envelopes, each with a good sheet of note-paper folded up inside, and many gross of indelible pencils; so I hope an equal number of anxious mothers, sweethearts, and wives will receive letters, free of all charge, from their Jack or Joe at the front, which they could not otherwise get. I have another box to go which is not quite full, and if a few ladies like to send me a dozen or two of square stamped envelopes I will gladly forward them with mine for the use of the naval brigade.

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam, in responding for the Navy at the dinner of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom at the Métropole last week, spoke of the readiness of our ships for mobilisation and the ability to man them without a moment's delay. Regarding re-arming vessels that now had muzzle-loaders he did not see the advantage thereof, as it would only be a makeshift. It would be better to spend money on new ships with modern armaments and let the old ones remain as they are, as they would be useful to go out and pick up the disabled vessels of the enemy. The noble earl suggested that a committee of offence as well as of defence should be attached to the Cabinet. Some of the older vessels referred to by his Lordship are to be prepared for service—the Nelson is one of them.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty at Osborne on Friday last.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, proceeded on leave on Monday, after transferring the port duties to Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. W. Bedford, Commander-in-Chief, North-American and West Indian Station, arrived at Port Royal, Jamaica, on Saturday last in the Crescent. As this is Sir Frederick's first visit to the colony, a generous welcome has been prepared for him and those under his command.

Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, arrived on Saturday last at Coquimbo, where our only depôt in the South Pacific is stationed, and intended leaving that port yesterday for the south.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian Station, left Hobart for Sydney, N.S.W., on Saturday last.

Rear-Admiral Polham Aldrich, Admiral-Superintendent of Portsmouth Yard, was honoured with a command to dine with Her Majesty at Osborne on Thursday in last week.

Captain Alvin C. Corry, of the Hood, arrived at Gibraltar on Friday in last week, and will remain there until the Ocean reaches that port.

Captain C. H. Bayly left Southampton in the Castle steamship Dunvegan Castle for the Cape to assume command of the portguard ship Monarch, in place of Captain R. D. B. Bruce, who has completed three years' foreign service.

Captain R. D. White, relieved from the Vulcan, and Captain C. J. Briggs, late Flag-Captain to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, arrived at Plymouth on Friday in last week by the British India steamer Mombassa from the Mediterranean.

Captain Lewis E. Wintz, of the Furious, reached Chatham on Friday in last week from Las Palmas to refit the cruiser under his command and give leave to the ship's company.

Captain J. H. T. Burke, of the Orlando, had the misfortune to be badly handled last month by some Chinese ruffians when returning from Victoria Peak to the lower town of Hong Kong. Such assaults still obtain in the colony in spite of an improved police force and other preventive measures. Some years ago an administrator unwisely relaxed certain restrictions from the native section, but his generosity operated adversely on the white inhabitants. With such a cosmopolitan population it is almost impossible to get at the rascals who waylay Europeans returning from the mountain residences.

Captain the Hon. A. Curzon-Howe hoisted his pennant in the Ocean at Devonport on Tuesday last for the Mediterranean Station in place of the Hood. Her commission under such a gallant and distinguished officer will unquestionably prove as satisfactory, and in every way as pleasurable, as that of the Cleopatra while he was Commodore of the Newfoundland Fishery Station, an account of which was published in book form by her medical officer, Staff-Surgeon W. Tait, who stated that every officer and man in the ship regretted being paid off from her.

Commander B. Currey, of the Royal Arthur, won the Lady Brassey cup for sailing boats at Hobart on the 15th ult. against twenty competitors of the squadron over a course of twelve miles.

Commander J. F. Parry is about to conclude his command of the Dart after a period of more than four years on the Australian survey. His last important hydrographic work was the discovery of several dangerous rocks (two of them exceptionally so) in the mail steamer track between Queensland and the Far East, information of which will be largely appreciated by everyone who navigates in those waters.

Commander G. R. Bethell, retired, M.P. for Holderness (East Yorks), which he has represented since 1885, appears by his attitude toward the Government in the present war to have alienated himself from a large number of his constituents who have supported him for such a long period. He saw a good deal of service while on the active list and is not a stranger to South Africa.

Lieut.-Commander the Hon. G. A. Hardinge, of the Rattler, is to return home and pay off that vessel at Sheerness, where she was originally commissioned in May, 1887, and has since then served continuously on the China Station. He will probably leave the latter before the arrival of the Rosario, to be commissioned on the 20th prox. to replace the Rattler.

Lieut.-Commander Marcus R. Hill, of the Hussar, arrived at Plymouth on Monday last and will pay off there, after three years' service in the Mediterranean.

Lieutenant W. O. Lyne, second in command of the Triton, surveying vessel, is to command the Waterwitch when recommissioned at Hong Kong to continue surveys in the Far East. He became Sub-Lieutenant 1883, and attained his present rank two years later. His career as a surveyor commenced sixteen years ago, and like his colleague and contemporary, Lieut.-Commander C. E. Monro, recently appointed to the Dart, he has worked hard in the cause of science for nearly half a generation.

Sub-Lieutenants J. C. W. Henley and H. J. Orr have been promoted Lieutenants, after serving twelve and eighteen months respectively in the junior rank, for meritorious examination at the Royal Naval College.

Sub-Lieutenant A. R. Palmer, of the Seal, had the misfortune, during the difficulties with the torpedo-boat destroyer flotilla at Falmouth last week, to entangle his foot in the chain cable while weighing the anchor, and was in consequence landed for treatment.

Sub-Lieutenant H. T. Mosse, of the Royal Sovereign, attains the rank of Lieutenant after eighteen months' junior service in consequence of meritorious examination at the Royal Naval College.

Deputy Inspector-General E. E. Mahon, C.B., Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar, who was medical officer of the naval brigade at Laing's Nek and Majuba Hill (1881), and specially promoted for his gallantry in those actions, attended at the Royal Clarence Yard Station on Tuesday last with Lieutenant W. T. C. Cole and the gunners and privates of the Royal Marine forces wounded in South Africa, now patients at Haslar, who were able to be present and brought to the notice of Her Majesty at her disembarkation for Windsor.

Fleet-Paymaster Charles Farwell has been placed on the retired list in consequence of physical unfitness for further service. While belonging to the Anson he had the misfortune to seriously injure his foot in November last. His retirement, therefore, is not at his personal request. Optional retirement is suspended for the present. Fleet-Paymasters C. P. Walker and W. B. Autridge having both been refused that privilege. Fleet-Paymaster G. E. Marcon was recently retired on account of ill-health.

Paymaster A. R. Parker, late Secretary to Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, and Assistant-Paymaster E. B. Swan, Secretary's Clerk, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last by the Orient steamship Cuzco.

Major-General J. I. Morris, R.M.L.I., relieves General Sir Henry B. Tuson, R.M.A., as D.A.G. of the Royal Marine Forces on Thursday next, and will become Supernumerary to the establishment of his rank; Colonel C. S. F. Fagan, Commandant Portsmouth Division R.M.L.I., becomes Major-General; Colonel Second Commandant R. B. Kirchoffer, R.M.L.I., obtains promotion to Commandant; and Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel A. E. Chapman, R.M.L.I., attains the rank of Second Commandant. Major H. C. Money is next on turn for the substantive grade of Lieutenant-Colonel R.M.L.I.

Colonel W. G. Tucker, Commandant R.M.A., and Colonel C. S. F. Fagan, Commandant R.M.L.I., Portsmouth, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty at Osborne on Thursday in last week.

Colonel F. Baldwin, Commandant R.M.L.I., Plymouth, who relieved Major-General C. H. Saxe on promotion last week, proceeds on long leave of absence in consequence of impaired health.

Lieutenant W. T. C. Cole, R.M.L.I., late of the naval brigade, with Lord Methuen's force, who was wounded at Enslin in November last, and now a patient in the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar, being sufficiently recovered to admit of temporary removal, was taken to the Royal Clarence Yard Station on Tuesday last on the occasion of the Queen disembarking from the Royal yacht for her journey to Windsor, and had the honour of being introduced to the presence of Her Majesty, who was graciously pleased to inquire of him regarding the nature of his wound and her Royal wish for his speedy recovery. Her Majesty extended similar consideration to the wounded rank and file of the Royal Marine forces present with Lieutenant Cole.

Lieutenant W. P. Arbuthnot, R.M.L.I., embarks in the Diana to join the Ringarooma at Sydney, N.S.W.

Lieutenant C. H. Hood, R.M.L.I., has been appointed A.D.C. to Brigadier-General H. C. Smith-Dorrien (commanding 1st Batn. Derbyshire Regiment) in South Africa, and proceeds at once to join that officer.

Lieutenant A. H. French, R.M.L.I., borne in the Doris, son of Lieut.-General Arthur French, R.M.A., has been landed for service in South Africa. It is much to be regretted that such an able artilleryman as his gallant father is not at the front.

Navy Foreign.

It was not to be supposed that the programme elaborated by the Superior Council of the French Navy would pass unchallenged by the acrid critics who are never tired of assailing the féodalité maritime. Lieutenant Duboc, who writes in the Yacht, has one great fault to find with it. He does not think that the battleships proposed could be better, but, granting them to be necessary, he considers it absurd to build only six of them if they are intended to be used against this country. He enforces with a good deal of cogency the opinion that, build as Frenchmen may, they can never build in adequate numbers to cope with our power. He therefore insists that it is necessary to find another means of overthrowing what the French are rather pleased to describe as le Colosse aux pieds d'argile. Of course, his mind turns to the torpedo-boats and submarine vessels upon which a certain school of French officers build so much. It is undoubtedly true that the British Navy, in the words of M. de La Porte, is the logical resultant of the necessities of the country, but M. Duboc is quite convinced that the necessities of France are not the same.

A similar view is expressed in the Marine Française. The programme is reasonable, we are told, if the lessons of La Hogue, the Nile, and Trafalgar are forgotten, if the fate of France is to be staked upon one or two battles or throws of the dice, if confidence is felt in the war of squadrons, if it is held that battleships can only be met by battleships, if there is no faith in the torpedo-boat, if the submarine vessel and the howitzer gunboat are despised, if there is no intention of resorting to the guerre de course, if, in a word, the exponent of the policy outlined is a reactionary. Is it reasonable to suppose, says this writer, that France can defeat England because the tricolour in 1907 will float over six more battleships than in 1900? The scheme of the French Admiralty is pronounced to be perfectly logical, but it must be carried to its logical end, and a huge fleet must be built, whereas the application of the principle adopted is pronounced to be absurd. The authors of the programme, says the Marine Française, have not read the celebrated lecture of the late Admiral Colomb, in which he endeavoured to prove—or, as the critic says, demonstrated—that destroyers would be more dangerous for British squadrons than battleships. The Marine Française has a programme of its own, which includes eight divisions of 24-knot commerce-destroyers, fifty gunboats propelled by turbine machinery and armed with howitzers throwing melinite shells of large capacity, one hundred turbine 30-knot torpedo-boats, one hundred submarine vessels, of which fifty for offence and fifty for defence, and a large number of tugs and flat-bottomed boats assembled in the Channel ports for the purpose of conveying an army to our shores. We are inclined to think that the French Admiralty does not contemplate anything so ambitious, that, in a word, it is more reasonable than some writers in the French press, that it recognises no insuperable barrier to friendship with this country, and that it should occupy itself in preparations for dealing with some other adversary.

The example of Germany, “flourishing and prosperous Germany, guided by an Emperor conscious of historic verity and resolved to make his country a great maritime Power,” has stirred the enthusiasm of Lieutenant Maurice Loir, who writes in the Moniteur de la Flotte under the name of Marc Landry. He sees the expanding fleet, the commercial navy growing, the shipyards busy, the colonial dominion expanding; and he attributes the principal merit in the new state of things to the present Emperor of Germany, who has proclaimed the watchword “Our future is on the sea.” Germany has shown docility in listening to the inspiring voice of her ruler, has grasped the essentials of her duty, the conditions of her future and what is her greatness, and has marched without hesitation upon the road indicated with patient obstinacy and the vis durans of Tacitus, which is the single condition of success. It appears to Lieutenant Loir that France—if she had a good heart and good rulers, if she were forethoughtful and possessed with noble ambitions—could rival in the sphere of naval expansion the fortunate subjects of William II. He does not indicate England as the example because her present sea supremacy is the outcome of two centuries of naval activity; but he holds up Germany, which is a continental Power like France, in some position of disadvantage, and with a shorter coast-line, as an illustration of the things that are essential for France, and he concludes by citing the words of Count von Bülow, who said lately, “In the twentieth century the Powers which are not strong at sea will fall into the background like the inferior actors in a drama.”

It is asserted by the France Militaire that the French battleship Bouvet has received certain fittings for her big guns by which the rate of loading has been doubled. According to this authority the same mechanism is to be fitted to the guns of the Iéna and the Valmy and to all the battleships sooner or later. We have not seen any description of this particular mechanism.

Another Russian coast-defence ship of the General Admiral Apraxine class is to be put in hand at the smaller Admiralty Yard, St. Petersburg. She will displace 5,950 tons, and will be protected by side armour and a plated deck. Her chief armament will consist of 8in. guns, several of them being placed coupled and singly in turrets. The Aurora is almost ready to be launched at the New Admiralty Yard, where a transport collier of 7,200 tons will be laid down.

The 7th Hussars have just sent out to Maritzburg a latten brass memorial to the non-commissioned officers and men who were killed in action and died in South Africa, 1895-98. Designed and engraved by Mr. Gawthorp of Long-acre, London, it bears a list of 30 names surmounted by the crown and cypher and enclosed within a neat border, the size of the whole being 3ft. 6in. by 2ft.

FIELD GLASSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

THE UNITED SERVICE GAZETTE, Jan. 27, 1900, says on The Question of Field Glasses:—It is unquestionable that a very large number of the bulky and heavy Field Glasses which are being so generously purchased for our volunteers, and which have to be carried across the shoulders or at the belt, will never see the front at all. If not discarded at Cape Town, very few will get further than the chief depots. It is astonishing how deceptive the weight is. Have the glass weighed before you buy it, and you will often find that one which you would estimate at half a pound weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and the hard leather case 50 per cent. more. Here the Aitchison Patent Pocket Field Glass comes in. It weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick, and its power and definition are equal to many glasses four times the size sold at three times the price. It will stand an astonishing amount of rough usage.

THE AITCHISON PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick for pocket.

THE TURN OF THE TIDE.

TUESDAY, February 27, the nineteenth anniversary of Majuba, dawned inauspiciously for the cause of the Transvaal and the Free State. At daylight, as Lord Roberts in his brief despatch from Paardeberg informed the Secretary of State for War in the morning, General Cronje capitulated unconditionally with all his force, and became a prisoner in the British camp. On Thursday came the further most welcome news that Ladysmith was relieved on the previous day. Sir Redvers Buller may well be proud of his achievement, and of the splendid troops which made it possible. It comes as a fitting sequel to Lord Roberts' success, of which in a measure it is a consequence. To both commanders the whole empire offers its tribute of gratitude and admiration. Besides Cronje's great laager and its stores 4,300 prisoners, including forty-six officers, and six guns fell into Lord Roberts' hands. The determining cause that compelled the Boer General to put an end to an heroic but hopeless defence, was the gradual closing in of the British upon his lines by means of trenches thrown forward at night, while the bombardment was intensified by the accession of a siege battery of 6in. howitzers. At three o'clock a.m. on the day of the capitulation a lodgment was effected within thirty yards of the enemy's trenches by the Canadian Volunteers and Royal Engineers, supported by the 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders and the 2nd Batn. Shropshire Light Infantry. This forward movement placed the British within bayonet charge of the Boers, and to prevent so dire an event as an assault in force upon his position, General Cronje at daylight sent in his submission to Lord Roberts. This important event on the Modder has set the crown of complete success upon the able strategy of the British Commander-in-Chief in South Africa, and has given the finishing touch to a situation which, for dramatic effect, has rarely been equalled in war. Well might Lord Roberts indulge in the hope that the event would prove satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government, reminding them at the same time of the remarkable coincidence of the anniversary on which it fell. The general satisfaction aroused by it has been shared by all classes of the Queen's subjects, and has been all the greater from the very unfriendly, not to say cruel, attacks made upon our generals by irresponsible critics, who have completely failed to recognise the enormous difficulties they had to face in the earlier stages of the campaign.

The surrender of General Cronje, the ablest commander in the Army of the Transvaal, with a force equalling in numbers a British brigade, after eight days of almost continuous fighting, cannot fail to have a great effect on the future course of the war. It is quite possible that its direct consequence may be the early collapse of the resistance of the Orange Free State, on the capital of which a powerful British Army is now marching. From the moment that the Boer General, halting in his flight, formed laager, to save if possible his cumbrous train, his fate was sealed. Scorning to yield, he bore day by day with the utmost determination the concentrated fire of fifty guns and howitzers, in the hope that relief might reach him. Heavy reinforcements acting in concert, and striking simultaneously might possibly have drawn off the British sufficiently to have opened a way of escape, but the actual numbers that endeavoured to burst through the cordon around the Boer laager were hopelessly inadequate, and arriving independently at different times they were easily beaten off in detail. Detachments arrived from Natal from the 20th and 23rd ult., and to General French's mobile column fell chiefly the task of repelling their attacks, while British Infantry blocked all approach to the great laager that lay on the north bank of the river, covering an area of about a square mile. Trenches had been hastily dug around on every side by the Boers, and the bed of the river itself was strongly occupied by sharpshooters skilfully entrenched. It is difficult to locate the position exactly, maps being so untrustworthy, but it lay somewhere between Koodoos-Rand and Paardeberg, in the vicinity of which places there are several drifts.

To avoid the loss that direct assault would entail, and to force surrender by shell-fire, three British field batteries with two naval 12-prs took post south of the Modder 2,000 yards from the laager, while three more field batteries, one howitzer battery, and three 4.7in. naval guns on the north bank enfiladed the river bed and swept the position with terrific effect at a range of 1,000 yards. By a skilful convergence of the British divisions Cronje had been hemmed in on all sides. The sixth division, taking a north-easterly course from Klip Drift, occupied a ridge east of the Boer laager, cutting it off from reinforcements that might come from either north or south. The ninth division, with the Highland Brigade and the Canadian regiment, making a forced march of twenty miles from Jacobsdal, arrived at midnight of the 17th ult. On the 18th the arrival of General French from Kimberley completed the investment. On that day the Boers endeavoured to burst through on the east side, held by the sixth division, but were repulsed with the bayonet, the loss on both sides being heavy. On the 19th the British force was reinforced by the seventh division and the Naval Brigade. Throughout the bombardment of the doomed laager the endurance of the Boers excited the admiration of our force, and pity became the predominant feeling for brave men condemned to such a fate. On Saturday some ammunition waggons placed for security in the bed of the river were located by a balloon and blown up by the artillery. On Sunday a last attempt was made by the enemy to break out, but was repulsed, and on Tuesday the end came.

In the eastern portion of the theatre of war fortune has been equally lavish with her favours. In other words, the relief of Ladysmith so long ardently desired has been accomplished. On the night of Wednesday Lord Dundonald, with the Natal Carbineers and a composite regiment, entered Ladysmith, and Sir Redvers Buller was moved next day on Nelthorpe, the country between him and Ladysmith being reported clear of the enemy. Substantial progress had been made by Sir Redvers Buller on Tuesday, when by a partial turning movement he captured by storm the lofty craggs of Pieters Hill, and subsequently the enemy's main position, after heavy fighting. The British right wing was then within six miles of Caesar's Camp, five miles of Bulwana Mountain lying due north, and three or four miles east of Onderbrook Hill. To gain this very important position it was found necessary to re-pass the Tugela and again cross the river at a point nearer to Pieters Station. This difficult and delicate movement was made successfully on Monday. Co-operating in the assault of the Boer position there were the 4th, 6th, and 11th Brigades, all under Sir Charles Warren's command. Sixty prisoners were captured, and the enemy scattered in all directions. The relief of Ladysmith has been a brilliant achievement, carried out in the face of stupendous difficulties. For fifteen days Sir Redvers Buller's army has been engaged in almost continuous fighting. His advance was throughout deliberate, careful, and well planned. It was pressed forward with extraordinary pertinacity, every advantage being taken of the possession of a superior artillery. Sir George White is reported to have made a sortie on the 20th ult. in co-operation—as far as possible—with the army of relief, and to have captured many of the enemy's waggons. The vicinity of Pieters Station was the scene of sanguinary fighting on the 22nd and 23rd. On the latter date Hart's Irish Brigade (4th), advanced under cover of the guns at Colenso and on Hlangwana. The Irish regiments distinguished themselves as they always do, and the 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers have been specially mentioned for a brilliant attack made under a deadly fire. Despite the desperate nature of the defence, the brave Irishmen held on during the day to the ground taken. Nothing would shake their determination to uphold the high character of their historic regiments. They renewed the fight next day but failed to capture the position by a frontal attack, and a change in the dispositions became necessary. The British front then extended for miles over broken and hilly country admirably adapted for Boer warfare. Meanwhile Lord Dundonald was active, with what result the world knows.

The fruits of Lord Roberts' strategy are being rapidly reaped in many quarters. On Tuesday, the eventful day of Paardeberg, Barkly West on the Vaal was occupied by a force detached from Lord Methuen's command at Kimberley. Subsequently several other places in that disaffected district were visited—to the great joy of the loyal portion of the inhabitants. In northern Cape Colony General Brabant's bold seizure of Dordrecht has been followed by that of Jamestown, whence he threatens Burghersdorp, a town lying thirty miles to the west on the enemy's line of retreat from Stormberg. The recent determined attempt of the Boers to turn the British left flank at Arundel has been promptly checked by the advance of General Clement's troops, and the reoccupation—also on Majuba Day—of Rensburg, and of Colesberg, with Colesberg Junction the day after, when the enemy were reported to be retreating on Norval's Pont. Lord Kitchener has been visiting at Arundel. His presence may account for the increased activity recorded in this part of the field. The rebels in Barkly East are disposed to surrender, and a general disposition is apparent among the enemy to move northwards towards the Free State and passages over the Orange River. General Gatacre gives the rebels at Stormberg little rest. On the 22nd and 23rd ult. he again reconnoitred their position. In the skirmishing that ensued a valuable officer was lost to the Service in the death of Captain de Montmorency, V.C. From Mafeking comes news of determined assaults by the Boers on Saturday and Sunday last, which the garrison repulsed at all points. Colonel Plumer on the 21st ult. received reinforcements from Rhodesia, which may enable him to strike the Boer commando at Crocodile Pools with better hope of success. Two of the three invested places have now been happily relieved. All thoughts will henceforth turn to the brave band who have so long rallied round the gallant Baden-Powell, and all will eagerly await their restoration to liberty.

Meanwhile, the war will be prosecuted with vigour, but to ensure its early successful termination a constant supply of men and an unlimited number of fresh horses will be indispensable. These, it is satisfactory to learn from Lord Lansdowne's statement in the House of Commons on Thursday night, the Government has decided to send out, arrangements being made for the early embarkation of the 8th Division, now being mobilised at Aldershot under Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle. On the whole the British Army is to be congratulated, for its honour has been well vindicated during the last few days. It is not for us to exaggerate the ability of our generals and the gallantry of our troops, but this we can say with perfect fairness—That at no time in the history of the British Army has a force taken the field in more difficult circumstances, and that never have officers and men fought more heroically.

Let Continental critics say what they may to the contrary, the performances of our arms during the last fortnight have been of the highest order, and show clearly that the martial spirit of our race is not dead yet, though some seemed disposed lately to imagine it was, because our generals met with reverses in their efforts to do impossibilities.

Army Notes.

The question of special promotions in recognition of the defence and relief of Ladysmith, we are informed, is under consideration. It is feared that some difficulty may arise in rewarding at once the services of General Sir Redvers Buller, owing to his present rank and status in the Army; but it is more than probable that steps will be taken immediately by Her Majesty to mark her appreciation of the magnificent services rendered to the British Empire by Lieut.-General Sir George White by his promotion to the rank of General for distinguish service in the field, a reward which is clearly due to him in consideration of the enormous responsibilities he has had to bear and the wonderful courage and determination he has displayed since his arrival in South Africa nearly six months ago. Lord Dundonald, who has established his claim to be classed as a Cavalry leader of the first rank, will be promoted a Major-General for distinguished service in the field. When in due course Sir George White's dispatches reach England, steps will be taken to distribute honours among that heroic band of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men to whose indomitable pluck we owe it that Ladysmith been enabled to hold out all these months against the attack of a brave, stubborn, and well-organised enemy. It is known already that Sir George White is very sensible of the support he has received from all ranks serving under him, and it would be in the nature of a national scandal if any red-tape routine were allowed to retard the issue of honours to the heroes of the Ladysmith siege. This view, we are glad to learn, is held very strongly at headquarters, so that the Army may look forward with confidence to the issue of a Ladysmith honours Gazette at a not very distant date, though at present it would be impossible to do anything like justice to those who have taken part in a siege which will live in history associated with the name of the distinguished soldier who recently filled for five years the appointment of Commander-in-Chief in India. Sir George White's dispatches will doubtless be in the hands of the Minister for War before the end of the month. As soon as they are dealt with, we are assured, an endeavour will be made to duly recognise those who have been most conspicuous during the earlier phases of the operations in Natal.

We have sought in past weeks to indicate in these columns the views obtaining amongst Service members as to the lines upon which future reorganisation of the Army should proceed. When the House goes into Committee on the Estimates hon. and gallant members will have an opportunity of expressing their ideas, and unless we are mistaken they will be able to remove the accusation unjustly made against them that, whilst criticising some of the proposals made, they have no constructive plans of their own to offer. Major Rasch proposes, we understand, to submit a comprehensive motion on the subject of military defence, whilst Sir Charles Dilke intends to call attention to the failure to provide an adequate supply of cavalry and artillery for the forces in South Africa. General Russell, too, will have something to say regarding the Intelligence Department, a branch of the Service to which it is to be hoped more attention will be given in the future than in the past. Sir James Fergusson also promises us an interesting discussion. He intends to move that it is highly expedient for the physical and moral development of the youth of the country, and that it would conduce to national defence, that boys of school age should be regularly instructed in military drill, and he will ask the House to declare its opinion that such instruction should be an obligatory part of the curriculum in all schools aided by public grants. With regard to this last proposal we are glad to learn that the War Office has approached the Education Department with a view of introducing sergeants to teach boys drill in elementary schools. Physical exercises are, of course, already encouraged at the schools, but they might undoubtedly be still further promoted.

The Army Estimates for 1900-01, which have now been published, are naturally of more than usual interest, and, as might have been expected, they give us some rather startling figures. The net estimate for the military expenses of the year is £61,499,400 as against £21,777,700, the sum which would have been necessary for normal services, including additions to establishment, under existing programmes. We have thus to thank the present war for an addition of nearly forty millions sterling under the head of military expenses alone. The principal items under which the increase occurs are:—Pay of Army, £15,200,000, showing an increase of £8,691,000 on the estimate for the financial year now drawing to a close, less the Supplementary Estimates voted in October and February; transports and remounts account for £10,000,000, increase £9,210,000; provisions, forage, and supplies, £13,100,000, increase £9,674,000. It is explained that a portion of this increase is due to the rise in the price of bread and meat rations, and of household coal at home, as well as to the additions of men and horses to the Army. The increase of a little over a quarter of a million for Volunteer pay and allowances is mainly nominal, as provision is made for full charge of capitation allowances due last year were met by means of the Supplementary Estimate. The sum of £330,000 has been provided for special measures for increasing the strength and training of the Volunteer force during the year. The pay, &c., of the South African local forces is put down at £3,000,000; of the Colonial contingents from elsewhere, £300,000; of the Imperial Yeomanry, £350,000; of the City of London Imperial Volunteers, £50,000—sums which strike one as scarcely adequate. The recruiting expenses are naturally much heavier than usual, being £234,000 in place of £28,000.

The Boers reaped nearly all the advantages of their peculiar military organisation before the relief of Kimberley. Since then they have begun to reap the corresponding disadvantages, a process accelerated by the surrender of General Cronje. As long as there was a prospect of success and the operations of the campaign were being carried on in British territory, it was possible for the enemy to hold together with the adhesion of a regular army; with defeat staring them in the face, and the theatre of war transferred to Boer territory, the looseness of their military organisation daily becomes more apparent. This is especially true of the Free Staters, who, from the beginning, have been more lukewarm in the cause than the Transvaalers. More than one commando has left Natal for the Free State without leave, no doubt with some vague notion of defending their country from the invader. That this homing instinct, so strongly developed in the Boer as to dominate all his military ideas, will tend still further to disorganise the forces of the Republic is almost a certainty. Neither Free Stater nor Transvaaler will stay in Natal the moment Bloemfontein and Pretoria are seriously threatened by the victorious march of the British. Another instance of disorganisation in the ranks of the enemy was the manner in which they attempted to relieve General Cronje. Though they knew his situation was hopeless, they went to his assistance as half-heartedly as if it were a matter of little consequence. Not since the outbreak of the war have they shown such a complete lack of generalship. For, instead of concentrating their strength on one point, and drawing reinforcements from the Orange River region, they attacked Lord Roberts' army in detachments so weak that they were bound to be repulsed. After General Cronje's desperate resistance, and the difficulty General Buller finds in relieving Ladysmith, it would not be safe to predict a speedy collapse of the war; but there is little doubt that the worst is over, so far as the Free State is concerned. What the Transvaal may do remains to be seen. Perhaps, as usual, it will be the unexpected which will happen, and the unexpected is a demand for an unconditional peace.

As South Africa is a country which has enjoyed only brief intervals of peace during the last hundred years, and limited its operations to particular seasons of the year, the present war has given rise to several remarkable coincidences. The Battle of Colenso was fought on December 15, the eve of Derigaa's Day, and as it ended in a British reverse, it was regarded by the Boers as an omen favourable to themselves. General Cronje was first reported to be in danger of defeat and capture on the eve of the Free States independence Day. The spot on the Modder, where he made his gallant stand, is not far distant from Boomplaat, where the Boers were decisively beaten by Sir Harry Smith in 1847. Even more dramatic was his surrender to the British on the anniversary of Majuba Day, second only to Deringaan's Day in the estimation of the Boers. The depressing effect it must have on the Republics can be measured only by the elation with which the news has been received throughout the British Empire. Not only have they lost their best general, but the "Old Guard" of the Transvaal, the very flower of the Boer Army. Such a disaster on such a day will no doubt be read by simple burghers in a manner peculiar to themselves. When President Burgers failed to take Sekukuni's stronghold they came to the conclusion that "the Lord was against him," and, in spite of his despairing appeals to their patriotism, went home. Like the natives, and all partially-civilised people, they are strong only in the face of success. General Cronje to the contrary; and so whether they look at his surrender from the Biblical standpoint or no, they will be thoroughly depressed by the news. All that could have been done by man was done by him to avert disaster. The retreat from Kimberley was carried out in a masterly manner. The resistance in the bed of the Modder was heroic, and continued for days, when a trained and disciplined force would not have held out for as many hours. The resourcefulness of the defence was magnificent. Nevertheless on the anniversary of the day when nineteen years ago 400 British soldiers were defeated through military and political blundering, 4,000 Boers, under a brilliant general, surrender to the British.

Have the Boer accounts of their losses in the west been correct? For months General Cronje's force successfully resisted Lord Methuen's Army, and at Belmont, Graspan, the Modder River, and Magersfontein, claimed victory; yet, when it surrendered to Lord Roberts it numbered only 4,000 men. True the losses before Kimberley in the various engagements with the relieving columns, and in the masterly retreat which ended at Paardeberg, must have been heavy, and the number of Free Staters, who stole away to their homes, too, must have been considerable, or the Transvaal prisoners would not outnumber the Free Staters nearly two to one; nevertheless it is impossible to account for the ten or fifteen thousand Boers who were supposed to have been behind the trenches at Magersfontein. The truth is, as we underestimated the strength of the Boers on the outbreak of the war, so we have overestimated their strength since the investment of Ladysmith. The enormous losses due to our artillery fire, which figured so largely in official despatches, had no existence except in our imagination. As Mr. Ralph, with American shrewdness, pointed out some time ago, if the artillery fire of the enemy does us little or no damage, it is more than likely that our artillery was no more effective in the Boer trenches, which have been swept so often on paper. The fact modern weapons of precision favour defensive tactics enormously, as the successful resistance of Mafeking and Kimberley prove beyond question. The smallness of General Cronje's force illustrates the same lesson. It was only overcome by superior strategy and tactics, large masses of men, and greater mobility. If the numbers of the Boer Army were something of a surprise, the absence of German officers, who are legion according to not a few critics, is more so. General Albrecht is indeed a German, but he is a naturalised Free Stater, and has a distinguished Colonial career.

By this time our troops in South Africa have a pretty extensive acquaintance of and large practical experience with the names of places in Natal and Cape Colony, and they will enlarge their knowledge by and by in the Orange River Free State and in the Transvaal. The jumble of Dutch, English, Hottentot, Bantu, Kaffir, &c., is curious. The British colonists were fond of flattering governors and eminent persons by naming rudimentary towns after them or their wives, and so Harrismith, Ladysmith, Kimberley, Newcastle, Durban, Molteno, Frere, Colenso, Elizabeth, &c. The Dutch set the example, and in the Cape Colony and Natal their treks were marked by a semi-Biblical Dutch and native olla podrida nomenclature—"burg," "stat," "strom," "spruit," "borg," "dorp," "kloof," "kop," &c., and echoes from the old country, Dordrecht, Heidelberg, Middelburg, Amsterdam, &c. The Tugela, which began to be known to British people at home at the time of Lord Chelmsford's first crossing of it in the invasion of Zululand in Sir Bartle Frere's war against Cetawayo, became painfully familiar after the disaster at Isandhlwana, and was associated with the feat of arms at Rorke's Drift, but no historical incident occurred after the action at Boomplaat till the annexation of the Transvaal by Shepstone, which was followed by the Boer rising—Ingogo, Laing's Nek, Majuba, and the rehabilitation of the South African Republic. The present war has led our arms to new regions, and the country north of the Orange River is now for us and for Europe the scene of an eventful operation of war. Paardeberg ("Zebra Mountain"—"paard" being the Dutch for "zebra") is marked on the map north of the road from Jacobsdal to Bloemfontein by Petrusburg and south of the Modder, and in the old time the zehras must have had a hard time of it if one is to judge by the names, "Wolf Spring," "Lion's Vlei," &c., not far distant. Koodoo and other antelopes abounded, and jagersfonteins, or "hunters' springs," abound. The nomenclature generally is quaint in the Orange River territory. "Dams" mark artificial banks at the neck of valleys to form reservoirs, and near Honey Nest Kloof are places named after Abraham, Jacob, and Scripture names—Bethane, Emmaus, Peterstown, Edentown. The veldt between the Modder and the Orange River over which the Dutchmen retreated from Magersfontein under Cronje is very badly watered. Dams and "pans" are numerous, and the only considerable stream between Paardeberg and the Orange is the Riet, and the country would be barren were it not for the rainfall which makes it a land of plenty.

We have not yet read any opinions of the foreign military Press upon the latest events in South Africa, but they have some interesting considerations to offer concerning what had already occurred. The Militär-Wochenblatt devotes an article to the Boer war in relation to European armies, and, although laying great stress upon the very special conditions that prevail in the present theatre of operations, it has arrived at the important conclusion that the existing conception of the attack must be greatly modified. In the presence of modern weapons it appears to the Wochenblatt practically impossible to make frontal attacks with success, or even to gain an ascendancy over the defending artillery. From the events of Magersfontein, and again of Colenso, Spion Kop, and Vaal Krantz, our contemporary arrives at the conclusion that the moral of the Boers was not broken by the tremendous fire to which they were subjected. In Germany, as elsewhere, the first phase of an attack has taken the form of conquering the enemy's gun-fire, followed by an attempt to demoralise the fighting line of the defenders by heavy shelling, so that it might be possible for infantry to advance in fairly favourable conditions. The lesson to be drawn from events in South Africa, according to the Wochenblatt, is that this view of the attack can no longer be held, since modern weapons have given something like absolute ascendancy to the tactical defensive. The German organ does not, however, hold that the defensive can finally prevail. It reproaches the Boers for their want of means to assume the offensive, and points out that even if Ladysmith had surrendered, and the relieving column in Natal had been destroyed, it would still have been impossible for General Joubert to operate successfully against the large forces Lord Roberts has in the field.

The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung still questions why General Buller has attacked places which it was impossible to capture and hold. Either his intelligence was very defective and he was in ignorance of the actual force and position of the Boers, or he was ordered by Lord Roberts, in his later operations on the Tugela, to attack in order to cover larger developments on the western or southern frontier. The Heeres-Zeitung then plunges into a hopeless attempt to describe the constitution and command of the various brigades and divisions in the field, and confesses to at least one lapsus memoriae. The line of the Boers is described as resembling an elastic ring, and Sir Redvers Buller had discovered that it could not be broken by direct attack, and that the special character of the country made turning movements almost impossible. Our contemporary is scarcely happy in the considerations it offers concerning the operations on the western side, for it attributes great strength to the position which General Cronje occupied there, and was under the impression that our railway communications were in some danger.

M. de Villebois-Mareuil, the French Colonel who is with the Boers, has confided some of his impressions to the French Press, and has given a very interesting account of the manner in which the agents of the Creusot factory have moved the guns in Northern Natal. Unfortunately, he says, a large part of the order which had been given to the French factory had not been executed when war was declared, but he says that the guns brought up to Ladysmith, including four long 6-in. of the Canet system, caused greater regret to be felt at the absence of the rest. According to the Colonel, a large part of the success which has attended the use of these guns has arisen from the marvellous aptitude of the Boers for appreciating distances. Of our enemy as a fighting man he speaks very highly. The Boers go into action with perfect steadiness and with their eyes open; they move easily, and are so alert that they multiply themselves, and they use their rifles with murderous effect, never wasting ammunition, and always retaining their fire until the decisive moment. In this way, being masters of their strength, they are men apart. Possessing such extraordinary coolness, resolution, and endurance, they belong to "a species of military élite long since disappeared." This, at least, is the view of Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil. "Around these men the world has progressed, but they have remained what their fathers were 200 years ago, when they carried to the Cape their traditions and their faith." In a letter to his brother, the Count de Villebois-Mareuil, the Colonel has expressed a high opinion of Commandant Botha, whom he styles the "Victor of Colenso," and he has a high opinion also of Cronje, Lucas Meyer, and Delarey.

The inaccuracy of the maps of South Africa is a source of much perplexity to chroniclers of the war, and the general vagueness as to places in the letters of correspondents renders it a matter of the utmost difficulty to locate events. In some maps—to take an example—Paardeberg is placed to the south of the Modder River, in others to the north of it. Again, Klip Drift is variously placed east or west of Paardeberg according to the whim of the compiler, or is altogether omitted. As a rule the greatest confusion appears to exist as to the position of drifts. We have, of course, nothing to do with the surveys of the Republics, but as regards Cape Colony and Natal, of which the published maps are equally inaccurate, it is a reproach that at such a time this source of information should so signally fail. Nor is the loss felt alone by those who at home are endeavouring to follow correctly the daily incidents of the war. It is one that keeps our officers in the field in a state of constant uncertainty as to the country lying in their front and occupied by the enemy. Correct maps on a convenient scale are as important to an officer scouting as field-glasses. There is little doubt that in their slowness to appreciate the value of handy field-maps our military authorities are far behind those who direct the instruction and equipment of the German Army. Indeed, the art of good scouting, together with all its accessories, appears still to be in its infancy in our service. The present war is teaching us many lessons of great value, and none of more value than that to which we now allude.

There is another matter of real importance to which attention may usefully be called once more. We refer to the probable combined strength of the forces of the Dutch Republics. The numbers given to the world from time to time range in an ascending scale from 40,000, which was generally accepted before the war as likely to be approximately correct. The Intelligence Department fixed the total last year at 59,000, including 9,000 for probable rebel Dutch from our own colonies and foreign mercenaries. A German estimate published since the outbreak of hostilities set the total number down at 100,000, giving full details. Since then the more recent estimates, coming from apparently good sources in South Africa, made the total 80,000. The latest statement on the subject is said to come from Commander De Wet. According to this Boer authority there are 57,000 Transvaalers, 26,000 Free Staters, and 90,000 foreigners and rebels, making a total of 173,000 men. What the actual strength of the forces arrayed against us is we probably shall never know. But this we do know, that after four months of the war our armies, operating on a wide front, and numbering upwards of 180,000 men, have only begun to force the enemy back by slow degrees, and after weeks of almost continuous fighting. Already the waste day by day of men and horses, but especially the latter, must be considerable, and as the armies advance the lines of communication will lengthen, and increasing numbers must be detached from the fighting force to guard them. These considerations show the urgent necessity that exists for maintaining a constant stream of reinforcements, so that the progress of the war may not be delayed, and that the end for which all so ardently wish may be brought into view as soon as possible. As the armies advance, moreover, they leave in their rear, flanking the lines of supply, the Dutch of our Colonies whose loyalty is in proportion to the power of the British in their districts to hold them in check. As to the strength added to the Boer armies by foreign mercenaries, we shall possibly not fully realize it until we arrive at Pretoria. Strong suspicions rest still on Delagoa Bay as a constant channel for recruits, and, notwithstanding official disclaimers, a jealous and vigilant eye should be kept upon it.

The public can have no sympathy with the firms of contractors who may be struck off the list—as Mr. Powell Williams informed the House of Commons the other day—for supplying unserviceable stores for the use of the troops in South Africa. There has been too much of this sort of thing, it is to be feared, in the past, and it is satisfactory to know that the system of inspection has improved sufficiently to cause frauds to be detected. There is no excuse for such villainous proceedings, and it seems almost a pity that Mr. Powell Williams did not feel justified in making known the names of the firms which have been guilty of such scandalous conduct. It is to be hoped that no undue leniency will be shown; for people who will be guilty of such an offence once may do so again, and it is unfair, alike to the taxpayers and the Army, that the War Office should attempt to screen fraud. The attention which has been directed to the matter ought to produce its effect. Doubtless the War Office is well advised in the steps it is taking. At the same time, a statement in Parliament of a more detailed character might have been expected, for it is scarcely right that honest people should suffer, perhaps by inference, for the faults of others who have been guilty of one of the very worst forms of rascality—an attempt to fill their pockets in a time of war—in the hope that the pressure on the departments whose duty it is to pass stores, might enable them to palm off inferior goods with impunity. The fact that the irregularities have been brought to light shows clearly that our system of inspection has greatly improved. This is an aspect of the affairs upon which the public may be congratulated.

A private letter from Halifax, alluding to the excitement there over the large mounted corps that arrived from the Far West, says, "it is composed of as fine a body of men as could be seen anywhere, and of which our country and Queen might justly be proud, good horsemen and pleasant, open-hearted fellows." Most of the so-called "cow-boys" are sons of gentlemen from the ranches all over the north-west provinces, some of them very wealthy. Amongst the 250 who embarked at Halifax on January 27 were seven doctors, all going as "privates." One elderly man of fifty years, brother of Bishop Baldwin, accompanies them, because three of his sons made up their minds to go. "The Queen," says our correspondent, "could get 5,000 instead of 1,000 from that part of the country just now did she so wish, for there is a war enthusiasm in Upper Canada just as great as in England. Canada will stand by the flag to the end." The troops looked well in their khaki uniforms and Oliver equipments. They wore their field service-uniform, leg putties, food bags, and carried the rifles in dark blue leather slings across their backs.

The "Scientific Corps" have been very much in evidence in Natal and in the operations of war in South Africa—railroad making and repairing, bridge construction, pontooning, ballooning, and fortifying, and their officers have come well to the front. As to the Royal and Colonial Artillery, it would be difficult indeed to say where we should be now but for their skill, courage, zeal, and energy. The proud motto, "Ubique," has been writlarge in South Africa.

We are indeed glad to learn from the statement of Mr. Wyndham in the House of Commons on Tuesday that the War Office now has it in contemplation to embody a number of Militia Artillery regiments. The Artillery is such a valuable branch of the Constitutional force, and its higher training is so essential that it is difficult to account for its systematic neglect by the War Office, and the wiser counsels now prevailing will tend, it is to be hoped, to give the Militia gunners that encouragement they have hitherto asked for in vain. There could be no better proof of the value of the Militia than that all ranks regard disembodiment in the present emergency as a cruel slight. The fact that this feeling exists ought of itself to convince the War Office that the days are past and gone when it can afford to regard this splendid force in the light of a sort of military feeding-bottle only.

Mr. Powell Williams, answering a question by Captain Norton, in the House of Commons on Monday, stated that at the present moment there are twelve vacancies among the officers of the Army Veterinary Department, for which there is difficulty in obtaining candidates. But the conditions of service are under consideration, and we are glad to learn that there is every prospect of their being improved. It is scarcely to be wondered at, as matters stand at present, that service in the Department should be unpopular, some officials in Pall Mall having gone out of their way to place its staff at a serious disadvantage in respect to all other departments of the Army. However, there is every prospect, we are glad to learn, of this being made right and the officers receiving the recognition they deserve.

Steps have at length been taken to deal with the cases of some of the officers who are removed from duty with their regiments by reason of their being prisoners of war. The first officers of senior rank to fall into the hands of the enemy were Lieut.-Colonel B. D. Möller and Major A. F. Greville, and Captain and Adjutant W. M. P. Pollok, and Vet.-Lieutenant F. H. Shore, 18th Hussars; Lieutenant B. J. Medjidie, 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifles; and Captain M. P. Lonsdale, and Lieutenants F. A. Lé Mesurier, C. Garvue, and C. T. W. Grimshaw, 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, after Sir Penn Symons' action at Talana Hill on Oct. 20 last.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.

Last night were issued the Army Estimates for the coming financial year, 1900-1901. They provide for an increase in the establishment to 430,000 men, and a total net expenditure of no less than £61,499,400, as against an establishment of 184,853 men and an expenditure of £20,617,200 originally voted for the current financial year, showing an increase in numbers of 245,147, and in expenditure of £40,882,200. It must be borne in mind, however, that the foregoing figures for the current year are those of the original Estimates only, and that there have since been two Supplementary Estimates, one last October for ten millions sterling and an additional 35,000 men; and the second, on Feb. 8 last, for thirteen millions sterling and 120,000 men. The total establishment votes during the current year is, thus, 339,853 men, and the total net expenditure £43,617,000.

In an explanatory memorandum, published last night, Lord Lansdowne, Secretary of State for War, says:—

The Estimates have been framed under the following abnormal conditions:—

(a) Provision has to be made for carrying on the war in South Africa.

(b) It has been decided to make at once an addition to the permanent strength of the Army.

(c) Temporary measures have been authorised for the purpose of increasing the number and efficiency of the force available for the defence of the United Kingdom.

Having recapitulated the steps to be taken under these three heads, all of which have already been stated in Parliament, the memorandum states:—

As regards the vote for men, 212,449 may be regarded as permanent, the balance being due to the war in South Africa and to the special measures for home defence.

The estimated expenditure of £61,499,400 is accounted for as follows:—

Normal estimate £21,777,700

Permanent addition to the Army 1,925,000

Special temporary measures for home defence 6,228,000

War charges 31,568,700

The war charges are based on the assumption that the full field force will be maintained in South Africa till Sept. 30, and a reduced force for the remainder of the year, but the estimate contains no provision for terminal charges, such as the transport home of the troops and gratuities on mobilisation.

Explanations are then given of the various Votes; and with reference to Vote 6 (transport and remounts), Lord Lansdowne remarks:—

Very large amounts are required for land and sea transport, a large proportion of the latter being to meet liabilities incurred during the present financial year. Arrangements have been made for the retention of a number of transports partly in South African waters, for the transfer of troops from one portion of the seat of war to another, and partly for the conveyance home of invalids and wounded, and for the despatch of reinforcements and of drafts to make good the waste among the troops in the field. It is also necessary to provide for conveyance of further consignments of supplies, stores, and animals to South Africa. The item for land transport provides not only for the conveyance of troops and stores by railway, but also for the hire of ox transport in the field.

On Vote 13 (War Office), the statement explains that the increase is almost entirely due to the war, and more than half is due to the charge for foreign telegrams.

Army Personal.

The Queen held a private Investiture of the orders of knighthood at Windsor Castle on Thursday.

Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Henry of Battenberg and the Duke of York, proceeded to the Green Drawing at three o'clock. The following, among others, received the insignia of the orders to which they have been gazetted. C.B. (Civil): Capt. W. de W. Abney, Director of the Science and Art Department; Maj.-Gen. E. R. Festing, R.E.; Lieut.-Col. J. R. L. Macdonald; Lieut.-Col. A. B. M'Hardy.

The Queen has granted to Mrs. Sherston, widow of Lieut.-Colonel John Sherston, who was killed at the battle of Glencoe, the set of apartments at Hampton Court Palace formerly occupied by General Sir Thomas Denny.

The Queen, on the recommendation of the Home Secretary, has appointed Captain Herbert D. Terry, late of the Royal Scots, Chief Constable of Northumberland, to be Inspector of Constabulary for England and Wales on the retirement of Captain Francis J. Parry.

The Queen, with Princess Henry of Battenberg and Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, paid a visit to Netley Hospital on Tuesday, to see the wounded soldiers from South Africa. Those who had sufficiently recovered were drawn up in the corridors, along which the Royal party were conducted. Her Majesty and the Princesses then went over the wards, and spoke words of sympathy and kindness to the men occupying the beds, each of whom was presented with a bunch of flowers brought from the conservatories at Frogmore. Her Majesty and the Princesses spent an hour and a-half in the hospital, and afterwards returned by special train to Windsor.

The Prince of Wales has consented to open the Royal Military Tournament at Islington, on Friday, May 18.

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle arrived at Aldershot on Tuesday, and took over command of the 8th Division, which is to embark for South Africa directly transport is available. Sir Leslie will leave Southampton for Cape Town on Saturday next accompanied by Colonel G. E. Harley, C.B., Lieut.-Colonels R. H. Morrison and W. H. May, and other members of the Staff.

The wounds of Major-General Hector Macdonald would appear to be more severe than was at first reported. General Macdonald was leading the Highland Brigade to the attack at Paardeberg when he was struck below the cap of the knee by a Mauser bullet. The bullet went round behind the knee, and travelling upwards emerged just below the hip. The bullet then penetrated the saddle and killed the General's horse. The wound is not regarded as serious, and General Macdonald is confident that he will soon be able to take the field again, but for the time being perfect rest and quiet are imperative. The disappointment of all ranks of the Highland Brigade is said to be intense at the second misfortune which has befallen them.

A Standard telegram, dated near Pieters Station, Feb. 23, says:—"Close and determined fighting has been in progress since yesterday. The Lancashire Brigade are now holding a line of kopjes on the left of Pieters. They gained the position by fighting of the fiercest description. The enemy, who fought in the most stubborn manner, delivered counter-attacks until nine o'clock last night, but were beaten back each inch. In one of their rushes on the position Major-General Wynne was wounded. He was succeeded in the command by Colonel Crofton, 2nd Batn. Royal Lancashire Regiment. General Wynne's wound is severe but not dangerous."

Major-General W. de W. Thackwell, C.B., has retired from his command of the Lancashire Infantry Volunteer Brigade, and Major-General C. Eccles from that of the Northern Counties Brigade. General Thackwell was appointed Oct. 17, 1888, and General C. Eccles in July, 1888.

Major-General C. E. Knox, commanding the 13th Brigade, who was wounded in action near Paardeberg on the 21st ult., was shot, it is officially reported, in the chest, but is said to be doing well.

Colonel St. Gill Kirks, half-pay, has been appointed Colonel on the Staff Commanding R.E., Scottish District, vice Colonel G. MacDonald.

Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, the defender of Kimberley, desires to thank his numerous friends for their kind telegrams offering congratulations.

Colonel J. B. Lynch, I.S.C., has been granted permission to retire.

In an Egyptian Army Order of the 11th ult. appeared the notice of Colonel Maxwell Pasha, D.S.O., having been struck off the strength of the Army. Sir Reginald Wingate, in bidding farewell to his old friend, said:—

"The Sirdar wishes to express his great regret at the retirement from the Egyptian Army of El Lewa Maxwell Pasha, D.S.O., who has served with His Highness troops for nearly fourteen years, during which time he has taken part in the following campaigns and actions in which the Egyptian Army has been engaged, viz.:—Ginnis, Toski, Gemaizeh, Firket, Hafir, Athara, and Khartoum; and in several of the above commanded a brigade of Egyptian troops. El Lewa Maxwell Pasha, D.S.O., has held the appointment of Aide-de-Camp, Assistant Military Secretary, Commandant Halfa District, Governor Omdurman Province, Deputy Governor-General of the Soudan. In each of these appointments the excellence of his work has been most conspicuous. The Sirdar feels sure that he is only expressing the feelings of the whole Egyptian Army in wishing Maxwell Pasha every success in his future career."

Colonel G. M. Fox will vacate his appointment as A.A.G., York, to-morrow, on attaining the limit of age, and be succeeded by Colonel E. S. Browne, V.C., from command of the 24th Regimental District, Brecon.

Colonel H. Moore, late of the King's Own Regiment, will be placed on the retired list on Wednesday next, on attaining the limit of age, and be succeeded as Chief Recruiting Staff Officer, St. George's Barracks, by Lieut.-Colonel G. F. De B. Davidson, Recruiting Staff Officer, Birmingham.

Colonel C. P. Temple, D.S.O., late Royal Berkshire Regiment, who attains the limit of age on the 16th inst., and should therefore be placed on the retired list, is to be allowed to retain his appointment as Assistant-Adjutant-General, Cork District, as some difficulty is experienced at the present moment in finding a successor.

Colonel H. W. French, half pay, lately commanding 1st Batn. Leinster Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 100th Regimental District, Birr, vice Colonel G. W. N. Rogers, whose five years have expired.

Colonel J. T. Skinner, C.B., A.S.C., is to retain his appointment as A.Q.M.G. at the Horse Guards in the present emergency.

The Prince of Wales, as Grand Master of Mark Masons of England, has appointed Colonel J. G. Kelly, C.B., A.D.C., commanding at Sialkot, to be District Grand Master for the Punjab, in succession to Colonel C. F. Massy, whose term of office has expired.

Colonel C. H. C. Dyce, I.S.C., from command of the Bannu-Tochi Force, has been appointed in command of the Allahabad District for eight months, vice Brigadier-General St. J. Michel, I.S.C., transferred to the Rohilkund District.

Lieut.-Colonel H. V. Hunt, R.A., Major H. Capel Cure, D.S.O., 1st Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment; Major W. Adye, Royal Irish Rifles; and Lieutenant M. B. C. Carbery, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, who have been suffering from wounds and serious illness, will, it is stated in a telegram from the Cape, be released immediately, receiving passports from Pretoria to the border, with a view to their immediate transport to England.

Lieut.-Colonel G. F. R. Ostrehan, 39th Garwhal Rifles, and H. C. O'Donnell, 9th Goorkhas, have been permitted to exchange battalions.

Lieut.-Colonel S. B. Beatson, 11th Bengal Lancers, succeeds Colonel Sir Howard Melliss, I.S.C., as Inspector-General of the Imperial Service Troops. The Viceroy, when visiting lately at Gwalior, referred to Sir Howard Melliss's retirement, and bore handsome testimony to the good service he has rendered both to the Government and the Native States. Anyone who knows the difficulties which have had to be overcome in working out the schemes planned by Lord Dufferin in 1887 will admit that the reference was a timely one. The Imperial Service Troops and Transport Troops are now in a highly efficient state. This is mainly due to the steady and persistent efforts of the Inspector-General and the picked officers associated with him.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel C. G. Martyr, D.S.O., Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, has been appointed to command a brigade of mounted infantry with Lord Roberts's force in South Africa, and took up his duties last week.

Brevet Lieut.-Colonel J. E. M. Dalrymple-Hay, 1st Batn. West India Regiment, has been selected for special service in South Africa.

Major (Captain) P. M. Sykes, 2nd Dragoon Guards, who has been Consul at Kerman since November, 1894, has been appointed Military Attaché at the British Legation, Teheran, vice Major G. F. Chenevix Trench, I.S.C., appointed British Agent at Seistan.

Major A. D. Addison, reserve of officers, has taken up the appointment of Staff Captain R.A., Southern District.

Major G. G. Tarry, Leicestershire Regt., has left the Army in order to take up the appointment of Chief Constable of Leeds.

Brevet-Major (Kaimakam) W. H. Persse Bey, 2nd Dragoon Guards, has been appointed to the command of the Egyptian Cavalry.

The appointment of Brigade-Major of the Clyde Infantry Volunteer Brigade is vacant by the resignation of Lieut.-Colonel A. R. C. de Hamilton, 5th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, and formerly 7th Hussars.

By the death of Captain the Hon. R. H. L. de Montmorency, V.C., 21st Lancers, killed in action near Dordrecht last week, Captain the Hon. W. J. H. de Montmorency, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, doing duty with the Egyptian Army, becomes heir to his father, Major-General Viscount Frankfort de Montmorency, K.C.B.

Captain M. F. Gage, 7th Dragoon Guards, has reached England after two years in Uganda, returning via Fort Berkeley to Khartoum through the difficult Sudd. He leaves immediately for South Africa.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, Feb 24.

A telegram received from Sterkstroom, stating that during a reconnaissance of the Boer position there yesterday a party of scouts came into contact with a number of the enemy, and the two parties fired at each other at a distance of only 50 yards, Capt. de Montmorency, V.C., and Lieut.-Col. Hoskier being killed.

"A Divisional Order, issued by Gen. Gatacre recorded the General's deep regret at the news of the death of Capt. Montmorency, V.C., commanding Montmorency's Scouts, and of Lieut.-Col. Hoskier, 3rd Middlesex Volunteer Artillery, who were killed. 'By their deaths,' the order concluded, 'the Division has lost two very valuable officers.'"

Sunday, Feb 25.

Major-Gen. Clements to-day made a strong reconnaissance from Arundel, compelling the enemy to retreat to Kielifontein.

Monday, Feb. 26.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram issued by the War Office last night, stated that parties of Boers from Natal again attacked our outposts in force on Friday, but lost a good many killed and wounded and nearly 100 prisoners. Our casualties were nine killed, three officers and 26 wounded, and two missing. Lord Roberts added that Lord Methuen had reported that Barkly West was occupied by our troops on the 22nd, and that the country to the west of the Cape Town and Kimberley Railway was gradually settling down.

The only information from Sir Redvers Buller was that he was gradually strengthening his position.

Lumsden's Horse, the force of Mounted Volunteers raised in India for service in South Africa, sailed from Calcutta midst a scene of great enthusiasm.

Tuesday, Feb. 27.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Paardeberg at 7.45 a.m.:-

"General Cronje and all his force capitulated unconditionally at daylight this morning, and is now a prisoner in my camp. The strength of his force will be communicated later. I hope her Majesty's Government will consider this event satisfactory, occurring as it does on the anniversary of Majuba."

At 11.20 a.m. a second message was despatched to this effect;:-

"From information furnished daily to me by my Intelligence Department it became apparent that Cronje's force was becoming more depressed and that discontent among his troops and discord among the leaders were rapidly increasing. This feeling was doubtless accentuated by the disappointment caused when the Boer reinforcements which tried to relieve Cronje were defeated by our troops on the 23rd inst. I resolved, therefore, to bring pressure to bear on the enemy. Each night trenches were pushed forward towards the enemy's laager, so as to gradually contract his position, and at the same time I bombarded it heavily with artillery, which was yesterday materially aided by the arrival of four 6-in. howitzers, which I ordered up from De Aar. In carrying out these measures the captive balloon gave great assistance by keeping us informed of the dispositions and movements of the enemy. At 3 a.m. to-day a most dashing advance made by the Canadian Regiment and some Engineers, supported by the 1st Gordon Highlanders and 2nd Shropshire, resulted in our gaining a point some 600 yards nearer the enemy, and within about 80 yards of his trenches, where our men entrenched themselves and maintained their position till morning—a gallant deed, worthy of our colonial comrades, which, I am glad to say, was attended with comparatively slight loss. This apparently clinched matters, for at daylight a letter signed by Cronje, in which he stated that he surrendered unconditionally, was brought to our outposts under a flag of truce. In my reply I told Cronje that he must present himself at my camp, and that his force must come out of their laager after laying down their arms. By 7 a.m. I received General Cronje, and despatched a telegram to you announcing the fact. In the course of conversation he asked for kind treatment at our hands, and also that his wife, grandson, private secretary, adjutant, and servants might accompany him wherever he might be sent. I reassured him, and told him his request would be complied with. I informed him that a general officer would be sent with him to Capetown to ensure his being treated with proper respect en route. He will start this afternoon under the charge of Major-Gen. Pretymann, who will hand him over to the General commanding at Capetown. The prisoners, who number about 3,000, will be formed into commandos under their own officers. They also will leave here to-day, reaching the Modder River to-morrow, whence they will be railed to Capetown in detachments."

FEB. 27, 1.5 P.M.

"Boer prisoners amount to about 4,000, of whom 1,150 are Free Staters, the remainder Transvaalers. The officers are as follows:—

"TRANSVAALERS.—General Piet Cronje. Chief Commandant M. J. Wolverans. Commandants F. J. Roos, J. T. Maartens. Assistant Commandants R. Woest and J. P. G. Verster. Camp Commandant W. J. Jooste. Field Cornets Alberts and Vande, J. H. L. Bosman, W. A. Lemmer, H. J. Badenhorst, Fris (who is a Scandinavian), D. H. Battings, and Venter D. J. Terblanche. Acting Field Cornets P. V. de Villiers, G. J. Du Plessis. Assistant Field Cornet R. J. Sneyman. War Commissioner Arnoldi.

Assistant do. B. J. Jooste. Magazine Master A. K. Enslin, Adjutant J. M. A. Wolverans, A. D. W. R. Jolwerans, A. Uing, M. S. Marel, J. A. Botha, and G. H. Grobler (in charge of Artillery), Farrier Thomas Moodie.

"FREE STATERS.—Commandants J. P. Wordaan, J. K. Kok, J. C. Villiers, R. J. Sneyman, S. Meintzes, J. Greyling, Smith. Field Cornet J. Cronje, C. Oosthuisen, C. Van Lyl, J. Nicuvenhal, M. Kvick, J. Kvick, J. Van der Walt. Commandant of Artillery, Major Albrecht. Lieutenants Vaen Heister, Van Dewitz, Van Angerstem. Guns captured are as follows:—From Transvaal: three 7.5 centimetre Krupp 9-pounders (?) and one Maxim. From Orange Free State: one 7.5 centimetre Krupp, one Maxim."

The Queen caused an announcement to be made in the official Court Circular to the effect that Her Majesty had that morning received the gratifying news of the unconditional surrender to Lord Roberts of General Cronje's force. Her Majesty telegraphed her congratulations to Lord Roberts on the success of his operations and her sense of the splendid conduct of the troops under his command. A second telegram was despatched to Sir Redvers Buller in these terms:—"I have heard with the deepest concern of the heavy losses sustained by my brave Irish troops. I desire to express my sympathy and my admiration of the splendid fighting qualities they have exhibited throughout these trying operations."

Her Majesty telegraphed to Lord Roberts on Tuesday morning on learning of the surrender of General Cronje:—"Accept for yourself and all under your command my warmest congratulations on this splendid news." And also a telegram to Sir Redvers Buller:—"I have heard with the deepest concern of the heavy losses sustained by my brave Irish soldiers. I desire to express my sympathy and my admiration of the splendid fighting qualities which they have exhibited throughout these trying operations." Lord Roberts replied:—"All under my command are deeply grateful for your Majesty's most gracious message. The congratulation of the Queen is an honour soldiers dearly prize." Sir Redvers Buller replied:—"Sir Redvers Buller has on the part of the Irish Brigade to thank the Queen for her gracious telegram of sympathy and encouragement."

Reuter's correspondent telegraphs that Cronje was in daily heliographic communication with Commandant de Wet, who was supposed to be bringing up reinforcements. On Monday Cronje heliographed that unless he were relieved immediately he would have no alternative but to surrender. Early on Tuesday De Wet replied with cheering messages, urging him to hold out as he would soon be relieved. De Wet, however, totally failed to effect any diversion in favour of the "Fighting General," a Fighting Field Marshal having been one too many for him, and rendered him quite powerless.

Princess Louise Marchioness of Lorne telegraphed to Lord Minto, Governor-General of Canada:—"I desire to express, on Cronje's surrender, effected by gallant Canadian aid, my deep sympathy for their losses. I am proud to have lived among them."

Wednesday, Feb. 28.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to Lord Lansdowne:—

"Paardeberg, Feb. 28, 11.55 a.m.—Cronje, with his family, left [here] yesterday in charge of Major-General Pretymann, and under an escort of the City Imperial Volunteers Mounted Infantry. Later in the day the remaining prisoners left under the charge of the Earl of Errol, and escorted by the Gloucestershire Regiment and 100 mounted City Imperial Volunteers. The women and children are all being sent to their homes. I understand that grave dissatisfaction was felt by the Boers at Cronje's refusal to accept my offer of a safe conduct to the women and children and medical care of his wounded, 170 of whom are now in our hospital. Very many of them are in a terrible plight from want of care at an earlier stage. I inspected the Boer laager yesterday, and was much struck by the ingenuity and energy with which the position was made almost impregnable to assault. Rensburg was reoccupied yesterday by Clements."

General Sir R. Buller telegraphed:—

"Headquarters, Hlangwane Plain, Feb. 28, 8.5 a.m.—Finding that the passage of Langewachte Spruit was commanded by strong entrenchments I reconnoitred for another passage of the Tugela. One was found for me below the cataract by Col. Sandbach, R.E. On the 25th we commenced making an approach to it, and on the 26th, finding that I could make a practicable approach, I crossed guns and baggage back to the south side of Tugela, took up the pontoon bridge on the night of the 26th, and relaid it at the new site, which is just below the point marked cataract. During all the time the troops had been scattered crouching under hastily-constructed small stone shelters and exposed to a galling shell and rifle fire, and throughout maintained the most excellent spirit. On the 27th Gen. Barton, with two battalions 6th Brigade and the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, crept about one-and-a-half miles down the banks of the river, and, ascending an almost precipitous cliff of about five hundred feet, assaulted and carried the top of Pieters Hill. This hill, to a certain extent, turned the enemy's left, and the 4th Brigade, under Col. Norcott, and the 11th Brigade, under Col. Kitchener, the whole under Gen. Warren, assailed the enemy's main position, which was magnificently carried by the South Lancashire Regiment about sunset. We took about sixty prisoners, and scattered the enemy in all directions. There seems to be still a considerable body of them left on and under Bulwana Mountain. Our losses, I hope, are not large. They certainly are much less than they would have been were it not for the admirable manner in which the artillery was served, especially the guns manned by the Royal Navy and the Natal Naval Volunteers."

Thursday, March 1.

A notice was posted at War Office during the morning:—
"From Sir Redvers Buller to Secretary of State for War."

"Lyttleton's Headquarters, March 1, 9.5 a.m.—Donald, with Natal Carbineers and composite regiment, entered Ladysmith last night. The country between me and Ladysmith is reported clear of the enemy. I am moving on Nethorpe."

Some hours elapsed before any further official telegrams were issued, but about seven p.m. a message, showing that Gen. Buller himself had visited the garrison of Ladysmith, was posted at the War Office. It was despatched from Nethorpe (5.20 p.m.), March 1, and ran thus:—

"I have just returned from Ladysmith."

"Except a small rearguard north of Surprise Hill the whole of the enemy lately besieging it have retired in hot haste, and to the south of the town the country is quite clear of them. The garrison were on half a pound of meat a day, and were supplementing their meat ration by horses and mules."

"The men will want a little nursing before they are fit for the field."

Both the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales telegraphed their congratulations to Sir Redvers Buller and Sir George White during the day.

The Prince of Wales yesterday sent the following message to Sir Redvers Buller:—"Sincerest congratulations."—ALBERT EDWARD.

Congratulatory messages during the day reached the Queen from the Kaiser, the Emperor Francis Joseph, the King of Italy, and the Sultan.

Crowds visited the London residences of Lady Audrey Buller and Lady White and cheered them and their gallant husbands to the echo.

Lady Audrey Buller sent a message for publication:—"I have read with profound thankfulness the news of the relief of Ladysmith, and the heartiness of the congratulations which I have received from all parts give me the deepest gratification.—Lady Audrey Buller, Government House, Aldershot."

Lady White wrote:—

"All the world is in sympathy with me, and to-day I am in sympathy with all the world. I am most happy to make public my cordial, my warmest thanks to the multitude of sympathisers with me during the trying period of Ladysmith's long siege; and I may add that to-day I am delighted—supremely delighted—at the joyful news of the relief of the beleaguered garrison and the happy intelligence that my husband is well and safe at last. As a wife I can say no more. What happy wife could say more?"

Friday, March 2.

The latest news up to time of going to press is that the Boers are in full retreat from Natal, and are reported to have entirely deserted Zululand.

Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener visited Kimberley yesterday. In reply to an address of welcome, Lord Roberts expressed the great pleasure it gave him to have assisted Kimberley in its time of trouble.

The Boers appear to have made a raid on Klipdam and Windsorton, damaging much property. A portion of the enemy's force has moved to Barkly West, which place they were shelling yesterday.

A large force of Boers is reported as operating about 10 miles from Paardeberg, on the right front of Lord Roberts's army.

All the hills round Colesberg are now found to be clear of the enemy, and have been taken possession of by our troops.

Gen. Cronje, with his family, will be accommodated on board the flagship at Cape Town. Under an escort of the City Imperial Volunteers he reached Modder River on Wednesday afternoon, when a guard of the Royal Artillery and 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regt. received him with becoming ceremony and presented arms, the bugles sounding a general salute. After lunching at the local hotel the General walked to the train.

The prisoners who surrendered number 4,300. They expressed their delight at being free from the horrors of war.

Gen. Cronje, it appears, had no idea that we should follow him with a large self-contained mounted force, his view being that we would stick to some railway system. He was quite taken aback to discover how mobile Lord Roberts's force had become.

The competitive examination of Militia Subalterns for commissions in the Regular Forces will not be held next month, in consequence of the number of candidates serving at home being less than the number of commissions offered. Candidates, who, having completed the number of trainings required by the amended regulations, and who, having produced the requisite certificate, have been accepted for that examination, will be medically examined, and if found fit will be commissioned in due course.

7th Dragoon Guards.—The transport Armenian with the regiment on board arrived at Cape Town on Thursday night from England.

16th Lancers.—This regiment has been well maintaining its high reputation since it joined the field force in South Africa. It had a sharp fight with a number of mounted Boers the other day. It was first thought the Boers had broken out of Cronje's laager, but it transpires that they were part of a relieving force from the South. "The gallant Lancers," writes a correspondent, "were not to be moved, their scouting was excellent, and after some hard fighting, during which the Lancers displayed the highest fighting qualities, the Boers finding the position too strong for them, scattered, losing a great many killed, wounded, and prisoners."

21st Lancers.—Reuter's correspondent wrote from Sterkstroom on Saturday last:—"The reconnaissance in force yesterday, under Gen. Gatacre personally, to Stormberg, was of the highest value, and would have been of a most satisfactory nature had it not been marred by the fate of the unfortunate party of scouts under Capt. de Montmorency, who, while racing for the possession of a kopje, came into close contact with the enemy. Our men took all the cover available, but the severe rifle fire which was poured into them at close range soon told a sad tale, and one by one officers and men dropped. The ill-fated party lost four killed and many wounded. The intelligence cast quite a gloom over the camp, the men being all favourites."

Somersetshire Light Infantry. (13th).—Writing of the operations on the 21st ult., near Colenso, the correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "From early morning until late at night we kept pegging away at them. Despite the caution exercised during our advance, a portion of the Somersets got into a very warm corner. They advanced to some kopjes on the right front and marched to within easy range of the entrenched Boers on Grobler's Kloof. The latter opened a heavy rifle fire, which our men endeavoured to return. Though our men sustained casualties numbering nearly 100, including three officers killed, they held their positions until dark, when they retired. The enemy fired volleys upon the vacated positions during the night. The conduct of the Somersetsmen was worthy of the best traditions of the old fighting 13th. There was simply no wavering. All ranks stood their ground like a band of heroes." The colours of the 4th Batn. were received at Taunton on Monday, and were deposited in the officers' mess of the regimental district for safe keeping during the time the battalion is on active service. Wiltshire Regiment (99th).—General Dunne, the Hon. Colonel of the regiment, writes to the Colonel of the Regimental District in Wiltshire, where everyone is much distressed at the late misfortune to their county corps:—"I need hardly tell you, and all connected with our regiment, how deeply I have deplored the almost unaccountable disaster that has befallen the two companies near Rensburg. Until the written despatches on the subject arrive at the War Office it is useless applying there for a clear explanation. But it is as evident as it was on the day of Balaklava that somebody blundered! and knowing full well, as we both do, the real good reliable stamp of Wiltshire men in the corps, it can hardly possibly be credited that it was through their fault that 158 of them were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. The Boers, at all events, give them credit for the way they fought in their dire distress, and say that most of the prisoners were wounded. That is as it should be, and nearly always was with our soldiers in the past. Of course, it will be my duty for the credit of the regiment and the country to see that the exact truth about the matter is ultimately elucidated. My delicate son—never intended for soldiering—has started as a trooper in the Dorset Yeomanry, because he considered it the bounden duty of every capable young man to serve his country in this time of need. So what the old Colonel of the Wilts preached to the country some time ago he has now practised!"

Leinster Regiment (100th).—In reply to Mr. P. O'Brien in the House of Commons, on Tuesday, Mr. Wyndham said: "The 3rd Batn. is not at Birr, but at Woolwich, and is going to South Africa. Their volunteering for that service was in accordance with the usual procedure, which has been explained more than once to the House. The full strength of the corps is 520 all ranks, and of these 518 volunteers." "One of the Rank and File" writes to us: "I wish that you would allow me to express the disgust of myself and of all my friends here at the action of a disreputable section in the House of Commons who are trying to bring the Irish soldiers into discredit by inferring that they do not want to fight against the sworn enemies of their Queen and country. We do want to fight, and if the persons I refer to would only visit the barracks of any Irish Battalion I think I can answer for the reception they would receive. Why should the character of Irish soldiers be blackened by paid agitators? Some of these gentry would, no doubt, only be too glad for the Irish regiments to be robbed of all chances of gaining glory for themselves in the field, but for the 3rd Batn. Leinster Regt. I can answer without any hesitation; if it gets only a chance it will soon let its traducers in the Houses of Parliament see whether it wants to go on active service or not. We are all delighted to go, and we certainly do not want to take part in a picnic in South Africa. If this business goes on every Irish soldier will rise in indignation against the scoundrels who are attempting to fill their pockets at the expense of the Army's honour and good name." The Batn. will leave Southampton on Tuesday next for South Africa.

Rifle Brigade.—Satisfactory news of Capt. Tharp's progress was received by his family at Florence last Tuesday, and his uncle, Gen. A. Lyttleton, has been informed by telegram that his nephew will be fit for duty presently.

THE EGYPTIAN ARMY.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

The creation of the Egyptian Army has been a triumph for the British officers who undertook and have completed the task. It may be doubted if the world has ever witnessed a more remarkable development than the regeneration of the forces disbanded in 1882. The troops, who had thrown down their arms and fled, were to reappear as disciplined, steady, and courageous forces, ready to take their part in the final conflict with Mahdism, and in the destruction of the Dervish power. It was certainly a difficult task, but Lord Dufferin acted wisely in determining to entrust the defence of the country to its own inhabitants. The names of Sir Evelyn Wood's associates are living testimony to the high qualities that went to the making of the Egyptian Army, and Kitchener, Grenfell, Hallam Parr, Wodehouse, Rundle, and others were assisted in their admirable efforts by some Turkish and native officers to form the army that Baker Pasha was not permitted to organize. It is true that there was good material in the fellah. He is docile and without initiative, but he is capable of responding to the efforts of good leaders who know and appreciate his qualities. He is healthy, active, hardy, and possessed of solid courage when he has been taught the supreme quality of confidence in himself. For the fellah good leadership, as Sir Alfred Milner has said, is everything, and men of the old Army, well led, behaved like good soldiers, as in the defence of El Obeid, Kassala, and Sinkat.

The first necessity was to provide for the soldier's comfort. Lord Dufferin's original demand was for 6,000 men, and the men were well fed, well clothed, well housed, well cared for, and regularly paid. The fellah became keen in the matter of drill, and smartness and efficiency followed. It was astonishing how soon a regular organised army grew up. Originally it was not contemplated that the new force should concern itself with the Soudan. When, however, in 1884, Lord Wolseley pushed up the Nile, Sir Evelyn Wood claimed a share of the work, and his Egyptians were employed in guarding the communications from Assiut to Korti. In the next year Sir Francis Grenfell, the new Sirdar, had a Frontier Field Force composed equally of British and Egyptians, and the latter had a substantial part in the victory of Ginnis. The Egyptians, having shown their ability to resist Dervish onslaughts, were entrusted in 1886 with the defence of the frontier post of Wadi Halfa, and the British reserve was gradually withdrawn, and presently the defence of Suakin was taken over. This increase of duties called for an increase of strength, and the eight battalions received, in May, 1884, the addition of a battalion of Soudanese negroes, mostly of the Shilluk and Dinka tribes of the Upper Nile. The experiment proved fully successful, and by November, 1888, five Soudanese battalions had been added, composed of men not remarkable for smartness of drill or discipline, but mostly excellent fighting fellows, who have been generally the best of friends with the British soldier. By this accession of strength the Egyptian Army became far more valuable. The position at Wady Halfa was peculiarly trying owing to Dervish raids, but the advance of Wad el Njumi in 1889 gave the Egyptian Army new opportunities of service, and the fellahen and blacks became in their measure famous for their exploits, the former for steady courage and the latter for dashing qualities. Lord Kitchener—General Kitchener as he then was—who had been ten years in the Egyptian Army, became Sirdar in 1892, and the subsequent course of events is still fresh in memory. It must suffice to say that the Egyptian forces, in the arduous operations by which the Soudan was recovered to the influences of civilisation, amply justified the expectations of their original organisers, and at Omdurman they responded to every call made upon their pluck, and endurance, and soldierlike qualities, proving to be an admirable military machine.

It is not perfectly easy to estimate the strength of the Egyptian Army, now reinforced by many who formerly were in the Mahdi's ranks. In May, 1892, the establishment was 12,902 officers and men, and the actual strength 12,547. Now the Army numbers over 20,000 men. There are twelve Fellahen infantry battalions and nine Soudanese. The cavalry, artillery, and camel corps are recruited from the fellahen. Four of the fellahen infantry battalions have native officers, while British officers are with the others, and with all the Soudanese battalions. Egyptian officers have charge of half the camel corps and half the cavalry. British officers join the Army with the rank of bimbashi (major), and their intercourse with their native subordinates is by means of Arabic, words of command being in Turkish. Promotions and staff appointments are made by selection. The fellahen soldiers, who serve for six years with the colours and six with the reserve, or police, are selected with care from the large number of young men who become available. In the Soudanese battalions no limit has been laid down for service. It may be added that the organisation of the Egyptian War Office is wholly English, and that the high administrative offices and commands are held by British officers, the Sirdar being supreme, though he may receive general instructions from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General. The Khedive is titular head and commander-in-chief, but the Sirdar is executive commander-in-chief, and controls the whole organisation and administration, and, as Sir Alfred Milner has well said, "The maintenance of the authority of British officers, not by virtue of their numbers, but of their character, capacity, and experience, will remain for some time longer essential to the well-being of the Army, and the safety and repose of Egypt."

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We are all giving of our means to funds for providing "comforts" for our Soldiers and Volunteers in the field. We are also unloosening our purse strings to provide for the maintenance of the wives and children of the brave men who have gone to fight their country's battle. The Government ought to have intervened in both cases, but we cannot attempt all at once to unravel the accumulation of years of red tape; and there the matter must rest for the present. Yet there is one other point which is of paramount importance to our troops, and which, so far as I have seen, has not yet been brought directly before the public. What are our maimed and invalided soldiers and Volunteers to do when they return from the campaign? They will be duly cared for until they are fit to be "discharged," and then, mayhap, they will be the recipients of a pension which will not suffice to keep their bodies and souls together, to say nothing of those of their families. It is notorious that veterans of battles within living memory have passed their days in misery and poverty, and have finally been borne to a pauper's grave at the expense of a grateful country! Public opinion has ever rebelled against this, and I am confident that any national scheme under Government auspices for making the necessary provision would be cordially and generally supported. But I am not very optimistic as to Government action, and I therefore feel compelled to draw attention to the imperative need of establishing a fund which the public will directly furnish and in which the public will be personally interested. There may not be any immediate hurry—other claims are more pressing at the moment—but the time will come when we must do something if we as a nation are not to be the subject of everlasting reproach. I hope the matter will be taken up. The war may be short, or it may be long; but we may rest assured that there will be deserving applicants for some form of permanent aid before many months are over. It is all very well to volunteer for your country, with the promise of a situation to be kept until your return. It is another thing to return minus a limb, or shattered in health, and incapable of doing the work to which you have been brought up.

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.

MR. GOSCHEN made his statement explanatory of the Naval Estimates on Monday, and since then no fewer than three evenings have been devoted to the discussion of methods and matters connected with the Navy. Needless to say, there has been much loose talk, but on the whole the time has not been wasted if only the country should have arrived at a clearer knowledge of the difficulties which hamper and limit the provision of an adequate fleet. A more inopportune time for the introduction and calm consideration of naval problems could not well be conceived, synchronising as it does with the moment of our first successes in South Africa. It is not surprising if the man in the street is thinking more of the surrender of Paardeberg and the relief of Ladysmith, than of the construction of battleships and cruisers. As Mr. Goschen himself said, there is nothing sensational or alarmist in the estimates which he has had to submit, and yet we seem to recognise a note of something like despair in his references to what he called the deplorable failure of the contractors to earn the money which he was ready to spend with them. The situation which he presents is indeed sufficiently grave for very serious attention, such attention as we fear at the present juncture it is not likely to receive. We are far from saying that there is cause for alarm, because we believe that Mr. Goschen is as much alive to the serious aspect of the state of things he refers to as anyone. This is the third year in which the Admiralty have found themselves unable to spend the money which the country has given them for the construction of additional ships. In 1897-98 the sum unexpended was upwards of two millions, in the following year more than £800,000 could not be spent, and last year again nearly a million and a half remained to be expended. Thus in the three years since 1897 nearly four millions and a half, which should have been put into new ships has been diverted into other channels, and this in spite of the fact that in each successive year Mr. Goschen has seriously informed the country that his estimate was the very lowest necessary for securing an adequate provision of new ships. Moreover, each year we have been told, as one of the reasons for not increasing the shipbuilding vote, that we were able, to build more rapidly than our rivals and possible adversaries. Another way in which to look at these facts is to consider what would have been the feeling of the country if in each successive year, when announcing his estimates, Mr. Goschen had limited the sum asked for new construction to that actually expended instead of that which he proposed. Would the country have been satisfied? We doubt it. Are we during the ensuing financial year to assume that a similar reduction in the money spent will be made? If so, then indeed there is cause for alarm; but, looking to the causes to which Mr. Goschen attributes the under-expenditure and retardation of progress, we are inclined to hope there will be a great improvement. The First Lord tells us that owing to labour difficulties and to difficulties in securing adequate numbers of workmen, with the necessity for laying down new plant, the delays in delivery of material are due. Surely these are not insurmountable difficulties if the Admiralty will make up its mind to surmount them. The trouble and dispute in the engineering trade, and the need for substituting Krupp plates for those treated on the Harvey system were matters which no amount of forethought or prevision on the part of the naval authorities could have prevented. But when it comes to a question of whether the British Admiralty shall be served first or last in the competition with foreign powers and mercantile shipbuilders there is a way of solving the problem in the interests of the nation which should be taken, or the nation ought to know the reason why.

Coming to the programme of the estimates itself, we find much with which we are satisfied. The provision in regard to personnel appears to be entirely adequate. There is an increase in numbers of 4,240, the total number for which provision is made, including the Reserves, being 150,000 officers and men. Of this number 114,880 is the number of officers, seamen, and boys, coast-guard and Royal Marines, to be voted for the year. The increased numbers are almost wholly in the ratings of petty officers and scamen, a very necessary provision at the present time. Fortunately also, Mr. Goschen was able to tell us that recruiting has been fully up to expectation, and that there is every anticipation of obtaining whatever number of men we may need. Satisfactory, too, in its way is the statement in regard to the reserves, of which it is intended to form two new classes, one of Marines, which sounds very hopeful. There has indeed been a decrease in the number of men entered, and also in those embarked for training, but this is doubtless due to removable causes connected with recent alterations in the regulations. We note with satisfaction that a strenuous effort is to be made to solve the problem of creating a colonial reserve of seamen in Australia and Canada. The proposals for improving the position of the engineer officers have rather taken the wind out of the sails of those who have raised questions connected therewith in Parliament. The engineers have not indeed got all that they asked for, but it is the substance and not the shadow. On the whole they will probably be satisfied, at least for a time, with the improved prospect both as regards pay and position which is presented to them. Executive titles, the power of punishment, and direct representation on the Board of Admiralty may come in time, although it must be confessed that the results of recent legislation in the United States cannot be considered as encouraging. We do not quite gather from Mr. Goschen whether he proposes to grant a committee of inquiry into the present methods of training officers and men with view to suggested alterations and improvement. The subject is a very large one, and the retention, or re-establishment, as it should perhaps be more properly called, of the Training Squadron is but a small part of it.

The programme of new construction provides for two battleships to be built respectively at Chatham and Devonport, but from the estimates of money to be spent on these vessels it is obvious that they are little more than a promise to lay down new ships when the slips in those dockyards are vacated. The sums allotted to these two vessels are not more than sufficient to pay for about one-twenty-fifth of the material required in each case, and apart altogether from their armaments and ordnance stores. The programme also contains six first-class armoured cruisers, of which two are to be built at Portsmouth and Pembroke respectively, and for these vessels it is estimated to spend about one-tenth of their cost during the financial year; so that it is evident that very little progress will be made with them. For the remaining four, which are to be built by contract, the sum taken in each case is equal to about a fiftieth part of her cost. In all probability, therefore, tenders for the construction of these vessels will not be called for until the early part of next year, if then. Other vessels in the programme are:—A second class cruiser, which is to take the place of the three third-class cruisers, for which a sum of £72,969 was taken in last year's estimates. This vessel will have £85,887 spent upon her, and will be laid down at Devonport, and two sloops to be built at Sheerness. The remaining vessels are two gunboats and two torpedo-boats, which will be built by contract. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we are not inclined to take much exception to the promise of this programme, believing that it will be much better if the Admiralty will devote the greatest energy to completing most rapidly the fifteen battleships and fourteen armoured cruisers already under construction. There are three vessels of the Canopus class which are still some way off completion. These are the Glory, Albion, and Vengeance. These three vessels and the first three of the Formidable class, the Formidable, Irresistible, and Implacable, should be finished and ready for sea during this financial year. In his memorandum Mr. Goschen merely expresses a hope that this will be the case. It ought to be made a certainty. With regard also to the armoured cruisers, there should be no real difficulty, if the Admiralty are in earnest, in getting a least four of the Cressy class completed during the financial year, and it is with considerable regret that we notice Mr. Goschen's expectations go no further than that two of them shall be delivered by their builders, which is a totally different thing to completion. Our much-vaunted celerity of construction will at this rate disappear entirely. In connection with the programme of construction, the most important point made in the various discussions that have taken place was that contributed by Mr. Stuart Wortley, who represents the Hallam Division of Sheffield. Speaking for the armour-plate manufacturers, Mr. Wortley was able to state without fear of contradiction "that they were able to meet any possible requirements of the British service." All the manufacturers asked for is "a guarantee of continuity of policy, and they were prepared to do all that their country required of them." This assurance that there will be a continuity of policy—which, by the way, was demanded by many of the speakers in the debate—seems to argue a want of confidence in the national determination to keep the Fleet at an adequate strength. The manufacturers are evidently apprehensive lest they should be led into a larger expenditure of capital for plant than would be fairly remunerative. Whether there is ground for the apprehension it is impossible to say; but at present there is no sign of a weakening on the part of the public in connection with naval efficiency, and, on the contrary, from the tone of most of the commentary upon Mr. Goschen's statement, a decided inclination to keep the Government up to the mark.

Navv Notes.

Captain Mahan has been speaking about the possible results of the war, and what he has to say is as usual both interesting and instructive. In his opinion whatever the issue of the war in South Africa, Great Britain will be a greater power than it could ever have possibly been before the war took place. When the war is over, he says, Great Britain will be able to transmit to any part of the world more rapidly than ever before a great force. It will be a land force, but it will be moved by sea, and to an extent never before possible. The power of the immediate future must be a sea power, and he prophesies that the war of the future is going to be a struggle between the power on land and the power on the sea. He spoke also of the singular effect which their two wars had had in the development of the sea power of the two great English-speaking nations. He considers that the Philippine war will force the United States to become a great sea power. America, he said, would be compelled to become what Great Britain is at present; she must have a standing navy, and the most essential thing to a navy is men, not ships, but men trained and habituated to ships. Captain Mahan's words find an echo in many of the American papers, and are considered to be especially apropos to the discussion about the best method of defending the Nicaraguan canal.

The removal of the Ganges from Falmouth to Harwich has caused, it is stated, a considerable amount of distress in the former place, the absence of the ship being a direct loss to a number of small traders. The unfavourable effects of the removal of the ship upon the trade of the place has been made a reason by those interested in urging the Admiralty to station some other vessel at the port, and it has been suggested by Mr. Horniman, M.P., that a second-class cruiser should be stationed there. In reply to this proposition the Admiralty have very properly pointed out that the stationing of ships must be in accordance with the requirements of the naval service, and quite apart from any question of any advantage accruing to local trade from their presence at any particular port. In this instance the Admiralty regret that the exigencies of the Service will not admit of compliance with the request of the Falmouth authorities.

Apropos of the alleged cause of the under-expenditure for new construction, it is noteworthy that the Admiralty have entered into a contract with a private firm to construct a new building slip at Chatham Dockyard with the necessary workshops and other accommodation. It is proposed to spend about £150,000 for this purpose, and the slip will be of such dimensions as will permit the construction thereon of the largest battleships and cruisers. The slip will be so placed in the extension ground as to admit of vessels being launched without risk of grounding on the opposite shore of the river. It was quite time that Chatham had further facilities for the construction of the largest type of vessels, and it is to be hoped that the contractors have been told to expedite the work in order that the country should have the use of the new slip at the earliest possible moment. There can be no question that if we cannot get our vessels built by private enterprise we must largely increase the public resources in this direction, and there should be no hesitation in pushing ahead with the new slip and occupying it as soon as possible.

In connection with the remarks which Mr. Goschen made upon the subject of naval auxiliaries, a proposition of Rear-Admiral Highborn's has special interest. The Chief Constructor of the United States Navy believes that a good system of colliers specially built should take the place of permanent coaling stations, which he says are expensive to maintain and difficult to protect, and which, moreover, add to the hazardous situation of a country at war with a naval power. Admiral Highborn apparently contemplates coaling at sea, for he suggests that the special colliers he would build should be equipped in such a manner that they should be able to tow the men-of-war while transferring the fuel from their holds to the latter's bunkers. For a nation like Great Britain with an ample provision of coaling stations the question of providing colliers as a substitute does not arise, or at least has not the importance which it might have in the case of a power less favourably situated. Apart from this, however, it does not appear to us necessary to make special provision for coaling at sea, and certainly not to put into the special colliers any more machinery or appliances in the shape of engines or boilers than is necessary to give them a speed which will enable them to make their voyages expeditiously. It has to be remembered that any additional machinery placed in the vessel must reduce her coal stowage, and if adequate arrangements are made for insuring that the vessel will arrive safely at her destination, it is more to the purpose to have her full of coal than anything else.

Commenting upon Admiral Highborn's proposals, a naval writer says:—"The coaling station question is one upon which the recent war threw little light, and in the absence of experience in a great naval war the actual practicability of such stations remains in a cloud of theory and surmise. It is probable, however, that the system of fixed coaling stations will never prove a decisive factor in naval warfare for the reason that before they will have become important the supremacy of the seas between the belligerents will already have been decided in one or two great naval battles. Future wars on the seas will be decided quickly. The opposing fleets will at once seek one another as in the Chino-Japanese and Spanish-American Wars. The issue of battle will be determined by other factors than coal. The fleet that is defeated will abandon the seas to its enemy, and the victorious fleet will be as easily supplied by colliers as by coaling stations. Every coal heap owned by the defeated side would then become a point of danger to the ships of the nation owning it, because it would attract the enemy's cruisers as a flame attracts moths and other insects." This view is not novel, but at the same time we fail to see that the recent wars give support to the theory that future wars on the sea will be decided quickly. It cannot be said of the Chinese fleet, or of the Spanish, that it made any attempt to find its adversaries' naval force for the purpose of fighting a decisive battle. In both cases the movements of the beaten fleets in the actions which ensued were governed by some subsidiary purpose. Both Admiral Ting and Admiral Cervera were forced to fight against their will. Instead of a naval war being decided quickly, it is quite as likely that where the adversaries were more fairly matched some considerable time might elapse during which either side would be endeavouring to secure some strategical advantage before a decisive battle took place.

The Commander-in-Chief at the Nore is energetically promoting the establishment of a Royal Sailors' Home at Chatham, of which that important naval depot stands greatly in need. The Admiralty have promised liberal support, and the rank and file, whose interests Sir Nathaniel Bowden-Smith so largely advocates, have not been backward with their share. The Home is to be on the lines of those at Portsmouth and Devonport, where men can obtain their beer, a beverage, we are glad to say, much more in demand at those institutions than spirits. Unfortunately interests clash at Chatham. The Bishop of Rochester advocates a temperance institution as preferable to the scheme of naval officers. We commend to that eminent divine the opinion of his brother, the Bishop of Newcastle, one of our great promoters of temperance, who, while Vicar of Portsea and Canon of Winchester, was on the committee of the Portsmouth Sailors' Home, and asserted that of two evils choose the least. It were better to supply men with unadulterated liquor at the Home than let them swallow the poison that unscrupulous people retailed outside.

Admirals Sir W. Hunt-Grubbe, Sir Richard E. Tracy, President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and E. S. Adeane, were present, on Friday in last week, at the seventy-ninth annual meeting of the Seamen's Hospital Society, held in Moorgate Place, E.C., and found the finances of this valuable institution in a satisfactory condition. The addition of a wing in connection with the London School of Tropical Medicine is a memorable feature of the past year, as valuable opportunities occur in the hospital for studying this important science. Special interest from a naval point attaches itself to this establishment for the mercantile marine of all nations. Its career commenced on board the old line-of-battle-ship Dreadnought in 1821. When old age unfitted her for further use, she was replaced by a sister ship, the Caledonia (renamed Dreadnought) whose last sea service was in the Mediterranean 1848-51. When Greenwich Hospital ceased to be the resting-place of old naval pensioners in 1872, the second Dreadnought was sent to Chatham to be broken up, and the patients in her removed to the infirmary previously used for the old seamen and mariners, which stands in the grounds of the great naval establishment allotted by their Majesties William III. and Mary in 1694 for disabled men of their fleet. Admiral Sir W. Hunt-Grubbe preceded Sir R. Tracey at the Royal Naval College, and is, therefore, well acquainted with the Seamen's Hospital, while Admiral Adeane not only takes an interest in the latter, but is also a Governor of the Marine Society, whose training-ship, the Warspite, is not far below Greenwich.

JOHN HEYWOOD, 30, Shoe Lane, London.

March 3, 1900.]

Navy Personal.

The Duke of York was present at Southampton on Monday last when the hospital ship, Princess of Wales, arrived from South Africa with wounded officers and men.

Admiral Sir Michael Culme Seymour and Captain Horatio Nelson have been elected Vice-Presidents of the Royal Naval Benevolent Society, a report of which institution has just been issued. From this we learn that the receipts for 1899 do not compare unfavourably with those of the preceding year, and 125 applicants have been relieved by the distribution among them of £1,521. On the whole, this ancient and excellent society appears to be flourishing, and the committee, while thanking all those who have so kindly supported them during the past year, again appeal to their brother officers who have not yet become members to show their sympathy with this old-established naval charity by contributing to its funds.

Admiral Field paid a very graceful tribute to Mr. Goschen on Monday last when he stated that on his, the constitutional, side of the House of Commons they were all friendly critics of anything the right honourable gentleman placed before the House, because they all recognised—and he voiced the opinion of the naval service in saying—that no man who ever presided at the Admiralty was more highly respected than the present First Lord.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. D. Bedford, Commander-in-Chief of the North-American and West-Indian Station, arrived at Bermuda on Sunday last in the Crescent, and will remain there until about the third week in May next.

Rear-Admiral A. W. Moore, Junior Naval Lord of the Admiralty, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty, at Osborne, on Saturday last.

Captain Arthur M. Farquhar, invalided from the Wallaroo, arrived at Plymouth on Friday in the P. and O. steamship Arcadia, from Sydney, N.S.W.

Captain Sir Alfred Jephson has, we are sorry to say, had a relapse, and is in a critical condition at Cannes.

Captain F. J. Foley, of the Pactolus, is actively employed in the somewhat unintellectual work of landing and bringing off liberty men and conveying mess stewards to and from the shore. As he commands the only cruiser at present with the Channel fleet there is no reason why a couple of third-class cruisers should not be added to Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson's force for the less important duties of his command.

Commander (retired) J. G. Heugh, D.S.O., embarked in the Union steamship Mexican on Saturday last at Southampton as senior subaltern officer of the second troop of Lord Loch's mounted contingent for South Africa. This gallant officer comes of an old Cape family, distinguished for their loyalty to the British rule and their generosity to officers of both services.

Commodore G. A. Giffard, commanding the Newfoundland fishery stations, is to return to Devonport in the Comus, and commission the Charybdis at that port in her place. The exchange is highly desirable from a defensive as well as tactical point, but the old "C" class corvette being sheathed with wood, and containing far less iron than the other, is decidedly the more comfortable of the two during the early part of the fishing season, when vessels during June are often in wintry weather. We remember the Sirius many years ago enduring almost Arctic rigour when she reached the fishing ground in that month.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, of the Diana, left Plymouth on Thursday with relief crews for Australia.

Captain Alvin C. Corry, of the Hind, is to pay off that battleship at Chatham.

Commander G. R. Bethall's differences with his constituents at Holderness, which we referred to last week, have assumed a more acute form, the gallant officer having declined to resign his seat for that division of the East Riding.

Lieutenant W. H. Cowan, D.S.O., who left Cairo on January 15, last, for South Africa, has arrived there and joins Lord Kitchener at the front. He served under his Lordship in the Nile Expedition, 1898, and afterwards at the action at Atbara, and the battle of Khartoum.

Lieutenant J. H. E. Allen, who served as Flag-Lieutenant to Admiral Sir W. M. Dowall, while Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, 1888-90, and subsequently resigned his commission during the following year, is now Major, 3rd Highland Light Infantry (Militia Bn.), and attached to the personal staff of Lieut.-General Sir W. F. Butler, Commanding the Western District (Devonport).

Lieutenant Hon. A. L. O. Forbes-Sempill, of the Victorious, serving temporarily in the Tweed, has recently been employed in the West River, Southern China, punishing the pirates, which are too numerous in that waterway for the expansion of trade and the safety of those engaged therein. The mercantile press describe the proceedings of this officer as a sharp encounter with the natives. As he only attained his present rank on June last, he has had an early opportunity of showing his fighting ability.

Sir A. J. Durston, Engineer-in-Chief, is in future to hold the relative rank of Rear-Admiral. This concession on the part of the Admiralty is in every way desirable, as it has hitherto appeared inconsistent that the head of the steam department of the greatest naval power of the world should only hold the same naval rank as those serving under him.

Fleet-Surgeon E. E. Saunders, relieved from the Niobe at the Cape of Good Hope after three years' service in that cruiser, arrived on Saturday last at Plymouth in medical charge of invalids and wounded brought in the Castle steamship, Kildon Castle, from South Africa, and now takes up his appointment to the Lion boys' training ship at Devonport.

Paymaster W. B. Penny, paid off from the Nymph on 16th ult., after three years' foreign service, left Southampton on Saturday last in the Union steamship, Mexican, for South Africa for special service under the Naval Commander-in-Chief.

Captain J. F. Daniell, R.M.L.I., p.s.c., who has served as Instructor in Military Topography at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, for the past two years, is appointed Professor of that department of study in place of Colonel J. G. Fawkes, who has completed three years at that post.

Mr. Goschen's introductory speech on the Navy estimates, made on Monday last to almost empty benches of the House of Commons, reminds us of a remark of the late Lord Henry Gordon Lennox in that assembly when he called attention to the absence of Members, and pointed out that while indifference attended the passing of votes where no exceptional measure was proposed, a different complexion would be accorded Naval expenditure were a national emergency imminent. Hon. Members would then troop down in scores and vote millions in as many minutes.

It has been notified from the War Office that no steps can at present be taken with regard to the examination of field officers as to their tactical fitness for command since, as at present arranged, there will be no Cavalry at Aldershot before the end of March.

The Royal Army Clothing Factory will in future be administered by the chief ordnance officer, R.A.C.D., under the instructions of the Director-General of Ordnance. The office of Director of the Royal Army Clothing Factory has been abolished.

FIELD GLASSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

THE UNITED SERVICE GAZETTE, Jan. 27, 1900, says on The Question of Field Glasses.—It is unquestionable that a very large number of the bulky and heavy Field Glasses which are being so generously purchased for our volunteers, and which have to be carried across the shoulders or at one belt, will never see the front at all. If not discarded at Cape Town, very few will get further than the chief depots. It is astonishing how deceptive the weight is. Have the glasses weighed before you buy it, and you will often find that one which you would estimate at half a pound weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and the hard leather case 50 per cent. more. Here the Aitchison Patent Pocket Field Glass comes in. It weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick, and its power and definition are equal to many glasses four times the size and at three times the price. It will stand an astonishing amount of rough usage.

THE AITCHISON PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS weighs five ounces and closes to one inch thick for pocket.

A MEDAL FOR THE WAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I beg to suggest that the authorities should show their appreciation of the loyalty and services of the Colonial troops serving in South Africa by having a medal designed and struck at once, so that each corps, as it re-embarks at the end of the war, may receive them, and so return to their homes in their fighting kit decorated by a grateful mother country. The medal might be issued without name, many medals have been so issued on previous occasions.

MODERN WARFARE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—A discussion arose in the Spectator a short time ago on which I venture to ask you to allow me space to say a few words. Mr. Oman laid it down that the two most essential qualities of an army, though rarely found in one and the same, are mobility and solidity. Especially as regards modern warfare, which in a sense only dates from 1793, I would add the quality of missile power. Take the most perfect tactical machine that we know of in history, Napoleon's army, and for its application the familiar instance of Waterloo. There you have the missile power in his numerous artillery, destroying to a large extent the solidity of his opponent, the solidity in the dense columns of his infantry, and solidity and mobility combined in the sweeping serried masses of his horsemen. It is at least doubtful whether they would not have broken the sorely-shaken centre of the allies, had, say, a division been disposable in answer to his agonised cry for "More infantry!" But the Roman legion combined missile power in its Principes and levis armatura with solidity coupled with great mobility in its lines (not columns) of Hastati and Triarii, being, I venture to think, superior to the Phalanx and the French columns (unnecessary with the veteran troops of Waterloo, and not imperative as with the comparatively raw levies in the Peninsula), and superior by reason of this very greater flexibility and lessened exposure to the enemy's missiles. Lake broke the Mahratta power in India by a happy combination of mobility and missile power, two light-horsed guns, called "gallopers," being permanently attached to, and accustomed to keep pace with, each cavalry regiment, while careful to keep the solidity in the shape of British infantry well within call. The whole subject will be found clearly and graphically treated in "Three Military Questions," by the late Sir H. Havelock (1867), where also the formation of the existing trained Reserves and conversion of the whole of the Yeomanry and Mounted Infantry, now being done at the eleventh hour, are strongly advocated. Lastly, I hope Mr. Oman will forgive me if I say that pace tanti viri it is only modern firearms that made so much entrenchment necessary, and that in the present struggle we at least seem to be suffering rather from the breach of the principle than its observance.

METFORD BULLET.

The Hon. Secretary of the Imperial War Fund, of which H.M. the Queen is Patron, has forwarded a cheque for £200 to Netley Hospital for the temporary assistance of disabled soldiers on being discharged from the Service by reason of wounds or disease contracted in the South African War. The Imperial War Fund is working in concert with Lloyd's Patriotic Fund in this matter, the latter fund taking over the cases as regards the question of permanent aid. The Imperial War Fund has paid out up to date in connection with South Africa, over £4,000. It has received in subscriptions £3,200, of which £2,100 was received from the Lord Mayor of London, and £500 from the Lord Mayor of Liverpool. It has therefore paid out £800 more than it has received, this excluding the Officer's branch.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN IN-SURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £100 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £100 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

AFTER the capture of Cronje and his force on Majuba Day Lord Roberts moved his invading army a few miles in a north-easterly direction to Oosfontein, with the double object of resting the troops on camping ground more salubrious than the vicinity of Cronje's wrecked laager, and of presenting a front to a strong Boer force concentrating athwart the Modder at Poplar Drift to bar the British advance. On Wednesday he joined battle with the enemy. They held a series of strong entrenched positions on a range of kopjes extending four miles to the north of the river and eleven to the south of it. In three divisions and the Guards' Brigade, with the cavalry, mounted infantry, and horse artillery on the flanks, the British, 45,000 strong, advanced to the attack. The Ninth Division moved on the north side of the river, the Seventh and Sixth on the south. While the infantry held the enemy's front, the Cavalry Division under General French, sweeping round by a wide detour, turned the Boers' left, and cut their line of communication with Bloemfontein. The result was immediate and decisive. At noon the enemy were in full retreat, scattering to north, east, and south, leaving behind them large quantities of forage and tents with one gun, and having the cavalry on their heels in hot pursuit. In the evening the headquarters of the British general were fixed at Poplar Grove, ten miles to the north of Petrusburg, a point on the direct road to the Free State capital and less than fifty miles from it. The apparent ease, due to able generalship, with which this victory was gained, makes one regret that the enemy were enabled to effect their escape, and induces the belief that the opposition the Burgher forces are capable of offering to an advance on Bloemfontein is less serious than was anticipated. On Thursday two brigades of cavalry, with horse artillery, and the Sixth Division, advanced ten miles on the road to the capital of the Free States.

As the overwhelming invasion of the Free State by Lord Roberts rendered possible the forcing of the Boer lines on the Tugela, by drawing off a portion of Joubert's army to the relief of Cronje, so the seizure of the strong and commanding part of Pieter's Hill on the day of Majuba, actually raised the siege. Surely and rapidly does effect follow cause in a series of well-planned operations, even over a very extended field. On Saturday, the 3rd inst., Sir Redvers Buller set the seal upon his great success when he made his formal entry into Ladysmith at the head of his victorious army. In this pageant the place of honour at the head of the infantry was fittingly accorded to the 1st Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, in consideration of their heavy losses and the conspicuous gallantry which has gained for them and the other Irish regiments the special recognition of the Queen, with the privilege of wearing their national emblem, a recognition and distinction on which we heartily congratulate them. The raising of this memorable siege changed the whole aspect of the situation. At home and in the colonies long pent-up anxieties found immediate relief. With the entry of the Army of Natal into Ladysmith, and the flight of the encircling Boers, the first grand objective of the war was secured. The so-called "entanglement of Ladysmith," that disturbing cause vitiating the whole initial plan of campaign, was removed, and the operating forces set free for the further conduct of the war in closer accordance with the laws of strategy. While we admit the embarrassing influence on the early operations of the investment of Kimberley, and the inconvenience at the time of the diversion of a force for its attempted relief, we cannot but think that it is the siege of Ladysmith that will be recognised, par excellence, as the main pivot around which the past and future of the war will have turned. In the past we have seen series or groups of spasmodic actions, dictated by the pressing necessities of the moment, disconnected and isolated, but yet bearing a curious resemblance to each other. Three such groups present themselves. The first falling in Natal commenced October 20, and embraced the actions of Glencoe (or Talana Hill), Elandsplaagte, Rietfontein, and Farquhar's Farm, three successes culminating in the disaster of Nicholson's Nek. The second group took place on the western border and included the desperate encounters of Belmont, Enslin, Modder River, and Magersfontein, again three victories followed by a repulse. Thirdly came the Tugela battles of Sir Redvers Buller, again four actions, Colenso, Spion Kop, Vaalkrantz, and Pieter's Hill, but this time failure and success in the order of their incidence changed places, for three repulses were succeeded by a victory so complete that the results far surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the British General. On the 28th ult., the day following the battle of Pieter's Hill, General Buller found the further positions that lay between him and Ladysmith clear of the enemy, and on the night of the 1st inst. the formidable Bulwana Mountain was abandoned, no trace of the Boers being left nearer than the top of Van Reenen's Pass.

The battle of Pieter's Hill presents the most perfect instance in the war so far of the combined frontal and flank attack. Its success is all the more striking and valuable as a lesson, since it was the outcome of a series of purely frontal attacks made between the 22nd and the 25th ult. which failed to carry the position, and resulted in heavy loss to the Irish Brigade. While this dauntless brigade, together with Brigadier Norcott's Light Brigade, still clung to the low kopjes they had previously seized along the front of the main position, the Fusilier Brigade of General Barton, with Brigadier Kitchener's Lancashire Brigade, again crossed to north of the Tugela on the morning of the 27th by the new pontoon bridge. A general attack on the Boer left and centre under cover of an overpowering artillery fire followed. Barton's Brigade marching north from the river made the turning movement. Our heavy guns searched the enemy's position from the heights of Monte Christo and Hlangwane south of the river, preparing the way for the turning force, which changing its course from north to west completely enfiladed the trenches of the enemy. By six o'clock two miles of fortified hills, the left and centre of the Pieter's position, were captured, in spite of a desperate and stubborn defence. By this able turning movement, which alone made victory possible, the whole of the entrenched lines north of the Tugela embracing the lofty crests of Doorn Kop in the west, Grobler's Kloof in the centre, and Pieter's Hill in the east, fell at one blow into General Buller's hands, with vast quantities of ammunition, herds, and stores. Numerous tents left standing, and trenches stocked with food and equipment of all sorts, testified to the suddenness and completeness of the enemy's flight. Thus was Ladysmith saved, and thus was vindicated the opinion of those who, in the face of much adverse comment and many amateur lessons in correct strategy, maintained that the existing circumstances rendered the retention of the place imperative. We now have it from the lips of Sir George White himself, as recorded by an able war correspondent, that Ladysmith was the first great objective of the combined Boer armies, and that its capture, of which the enemy never entertained a doubt, was to be the signal for a general rising of the Natal Dutch. He considered that had he evacuated it to hold the Tugela, he would have been turned by superior forces, and Pietermaritzburg, not Ladysmith, would have become the scene of his defence and struggle.

This is the view we have always taken of the situation. As far back as December 16 last we ventured to express our opinion that, notwithstanding the absurd contentions of foreign critics, Sir George White was right in all the circumstances in the action he had taken. The bulk of Sir Redvers Buller's army now lies encamped on the hills lately held by Joubert's forces north of Ladysmith, while the road to Van Reenen's Pass is being searched by a mounted column. The country round is clear of the enemy, who are supposed to have taken up a fresh position on the Biggarsberg range, twenty miles to the north.

Distinct progress has lately been made in northern Cape Colony, and the enemy are being steadily pushed back into the Free State. General Clements has advanced to the Orange River, and occupies Norval's Pont. General Brabant's recent successes have led to the evacuation of Stormberg and Burghersdorp, and the latter town was occupied by General Gatacre on Tuesday. Mafeking was subjected to a fresh attack on the 16th ult., which was repulsed with loss. Later news of the 18th shows that the garrison is now enduring serious privations. Colonel Plumer on the 25th occupied Crocodile Pools, the Boers having gone south towards Lobatsi. The relieving column was then within eighty miles of Mafeking. In Zululand the scouts have been again active, having crossed the Transvaal border from Melmoth and engaged with success a commando of the enemy. Viewed as a whole the military situation is highly satisfactory. One thing alone is there to cause any disquietude, and that is the undoubted spread of rebellion in certain of the western districts of Cape Colony. The prompt and energetic action needed for the suppression of this dangerous movement will, we have no doubt, be at once applied.

THE INVASION OF THE REPUBLICS.

"EVERY day," said the leading journal last Saturday, "brings fresh evidence of the value of sound strategy, though our just satisfaction at the results is tempered with sorrow for the loss of thousands of brave men sacrificed in pursuance of strategy radically unsound." To attempt to obscure the value of Lord Roberts's service is the last thing that the most devoted partisan of General Buller or of Lord Methuen would desire any friend of theirs to do. What was possible in February could not have been attempted, we honestly believe, at the end of October or in mid-November. Kimberley has been relieved from an investment of no very great astringency, and Ladysmith has been delivered from the pressure of an army which made but one strenuous attempt to carry the position by assault. Natal is now clear of the levies which invaded the colony, Cronje has capitulated with a small body of the burgher army which had been resisting the advance of Lord Methuen's force on the Modder. Stormberg has received General Gatacre once more, this time with open arms, and Colesberg, which had a vacillating existence, now British and now Boer, has for the time become, and, we feel assured, in permanency, a fixed possession of Her Majesty as paramount Sovereign and Suzerain of British South Africa. The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief is resting, and probably will remain for a few days more to make his preparations for another attack upon the Boer Army. It is not necessary, we think, to accompany this happy change in the campaign which commenced so disastrously with comments which appear to us to be unjust. The results may be due to causes which did not exist at the time of the change to which recent successes are ascribed. Sir George White has given expression to his views of the pressure put upon him in the disposition of the troops under his command. We have not, as yet, had any disclosure of the reasons which led Sir Redvers Buller to persist in his determination to release the garrison of Ladysmith. The Government at home declared he was quite his own master. It may be that he was acting on his own judgment. It might be asked by a candid critic why Generals should be blamed for a policy which assuredly they could not have put in force when the burghers were pouring down the passes of the Drakensberg. Buller, Methuen, Gatacre would have been bold, indeed, had they dared to adventure an army, which had neither artillery, cavalry, or transport, in the veldt in a wild endeavour to pounce upon Bloemfontein, and to carry the capital of the Transvaal, with hundreds of miles from bases of supply. "People talk," says the Times, "of General Buller relieving Ladysmith, but as a matter of fact it was Lord Roberts who relieved General Buller and Ladysmith together." But General Buller, when he was called upon to clear Natal of the enemy, had not the means of doing what Lord Roberts did, any more than Sir George White, when he fell back on Ladysmith, could have marched to the Boer capitals.

Army Notes.

The Queen has surpassed herself! For sixty years she has been one of the main factors in the growth of the Empire, the only constitutional link left between the Colonies and the Mother Country. Never since time was has a Sovereign Lady called forth such passionate devotion from men who have never seen her face. The only discordant note came from Ireland's political representatives, though, at the same time, Irish soldiers were winning the admiration of the world at the front. Such a contrast could not fail to strike a Sovereign, who is also a woman, with that sound judgment, exquisite tact, and unselfish devotion to duty, which have made her the mother of her people. She is endeavouring to tune the Irish harp into harmony with the Imperial lay. That, at her advanced age, she should, at her own free will, announce her intention of visiting Ireland, will touch the Irish heart as a generation of good government never could. The new Army Order, permitting men of all ranks in the Irish Regiments to wear a sprig of shamrock on St. Patrick's Day in memory of the gallantry displayed by Irish soldiers on the battlefields of South Africa, is equally tactful. Hitherto for an Irish soldier to display his country's emblem on the day of his country's patron saint has been regarded as a breach of discipline. Both the new Army Order and the Queen's desire to visit Ireland are complimentary to Ireland in a fashion whose subtlety leaves no room for carping.

The meeting of Service members which was held in one of the Committee-rooms of the House of Commons on Thursday, may be fraught with important results in the future. The Committee had under consideration a draft letter from Lieut.-Colonel Welby dealing with the question of Army reform. This letter has been referred to a sub-committee of five members in the hope, we understand, that there may be evolved from it some definite scheme of Army reform, which Service members may unite in pressing upon the Government. Colonel Welby's draft letter lays it down that to ensure the defence of this country and the safety of the Empire it will be necessary, when the war is ended, to remove by a thorough reform of our military system the defects which the war has disclosed. The lines which this reform should take is indicated in some detail. The field Army, maintained in readiness for an immediate call, whatever its numbers may be, must in organisation, preparation, armament, and training be the equal of a force of the same numbers any other nation can place in the field. The auxiliary forces, maintained for home defence and emergency, must in addition to the troops required for garrisoning our coaling stations, seaports, and defences provide an organised force equivalent at least to three foreign army corps, duly proportioned in all arms, especially in artillery, and provided with cadres of transport, ammunition, trains and services, ready to be filled up in time of need, to complete the force and render it mobile in the field. The draft letter which has been referred to the sub-committee further suggests that in the re-apportionment of work amongst the members of the Consultative Council of the Secretary of State for War the duties of administration should be distinctly separated from all duties whereby the executive is directed or carried into effect; that the Commander-in-Chief should be relieved from supervision of the military administrative departments of the War Office, and be responsible to the Secretary of State for the executive and for the preparation of the Army for war; and that in the consideration of policy or greater matters affecting the executive, general officers employed in carrying the executive into effect should be summoned into council. It is urged, moreover, that the selection, training, and supervision of staff officers should be systematised and placed in charge of a general officer of high rank who would be responsible for the efficiency of the staff as a whole. In conclusion the letter states that the promotion of all regimental and departmental officers should be on the recommendation of the Army Board, with the advice of those under whose command the officer is serving. Some of these proposals are, of course, very controversial, and the scheme will probably emerge from the Committee to which it has been referred in a greatly altered condition. Still, Colonel Welby has laid down a good basis upon which reformers at the House may go to work, and he will have done his colleagues an excellent service if, as a result, the Service Members' Committee decide on a definite programme which they may press on the Government.

The House of Lords, it seems, is to have its Committee of Service Members as well as the House of Commons. As a result of negotiations which have been going on a Committee has been formed, having for its object the advancement of the interests of the Navy, Army, and Auxiliary forces. The Duke of Bedford has consented to act as chairman, and Lord Blythwood will be the hon. secretary. The attempt which is to be made to secure concerted action on the part of those who take an interest in naval and military matters in the House of Lords will be watched with interest. The Committee will not have the same scope in the Upper Chamber for airing its views as obtains in the Lower House. But though their lordships have no controlling voice in the voting of money for the Army and Navy, it is not difficult to inaugurate a debate in the "Gilded Chamber." As some of the members of the Committee are understood to hold strong views with regard to the Government's latest military proposals, it should not be long before this fact is taken advantage of.

Mr. Wyndham, we are glad to hear, is now on the high road to recovery. The Under-Secretary for War has been absent from Westminster for quite a number of days. It is hoped, however, that he will be sufficiently recovered to take up his Parliamentary duties on Monday, when the Army Estimates are down for discussion. There is no truth in the report that Mr. Wyndham's health has broken down as a consequence of over-work. The Under-Secretary has undoubtedly had a very busy time of it since the war broke out, but he has stood the strain well. He has simply been suffering from loss of voice consequent upon a slight affection of the throat.

We have been told, with a great show of authority, that the High Commissioner and Governor of Natal were responsible for "the entanglement of Ladysmith," that they urged political considerations on Sir George White until he allowed his military judgment to be overruled. According to Mr. Winston Churchill's interview with the hero of Ladysmith, this was not the case. He occupied Ladysmith because, in his opinion, it was the only thing to be done, and there is little doubt that history will justify him. No one knew better than he that to have attempted to hold the line of the Tugela with the force at his command was to court disaster. The enemy were in overwhelming numbers, mobile, and aided by the disloyal Dutch. The colony was not prepared for invasion, for there was not a single gun of position on the western border. Ladysmith, as a railway centre, and as an Imperial dépôt, was regarded by the Boers as a place of importance. Therefore, in occupying it Sir George White obeyed the sound military axiom of doing what the enemy least desired. When the history of the war comes to be written it will be seen that the futile efforts of the Boers to take Mafeking, Kimberley, and Ladysmith, served our purpose better than the early strategy of our generals in the field. Sir George White recognises this, perhaps, more clearly than his critics at home, when he says that the occupation of Ladysmith saved Natal from being ravaged, and Maritzburg from investment. The Boers were kept in front of Ladysmith, whereas they might have overrun the whole colony. That their anxiety to take the town destroyed their plan of campaign is admitted even by themselves. It caused them to make the disastrous attack on Wagon Hill, of January 6. It held them in Natal when they should have been hurrying to the relief of General Cronje. No doubt the investment of Ladysmith was responsible for the division of our forces, and consequent weakness, but, on the whole it has done more harm to the Boers than it has done to us.

The Home Government has requested the Australasian colonies to raise a Bushmen's Corps, 2,000 strong. Nothing more clearly marks the strides we have taken towards Imperial unity since the outbreak of the war. Six months ago colonial aid was accepted with an indulgent smile; three months later it was accepted with condescension; last week, for the first time in our history, it was asked. That the colonies will respond with enthusiasm there is not the slightest doubt. From the purely military point of view, also, the wording of Mr. Chamberlain's telegram is significant, for the new corps is to be raised for service "outside the limits of the Cape Colony and Natal." Apparently the Government anticipate guerilla warfare, or the condition would have been unnecessary. In the remoter districts of the Transvaal, especially the Zoutpansberg, bordering on Rhodesia, small bodies of the enemy may hold out for months. That the confidence of the main army will stand repeated shocks of defeat is not at all likely. Therefore the Australasians are to be employed, not only as soldiers, but as policemen, for the duties of which their training fits them admirably. When the first corps was being raised to send to the front its soldierly qualities were doubted. As a mounted police force its efficiency is unquestioned. The eye and ear of a bushman are as keen as those of a Boer. He is accustomed to ride enormous distances over just such a country as the Transvaal, and in just such a climate. He is able to find his way anywhere without the aid of a map, and to act on his own responsibility. The difficulties of transport are nothing to him. Loneliness is a familiar condition of his life. Hardship and danger he faces often enough to develop his powers of endurance. In truth, he will find the conditions of existence in the Transvaal easier than they are in the Australian bush. So that if the war drags on in guerilla fighting the bushman is the man of all others to bring it to an end.

It surely is time that the public were placed in possession of the despatches of Sir William Gatacre dealing with the disastrous action at Stormberg and those of Lord Methuen on the subject of his equally unfortunate operations at Magersfontein. These actions were fought on Dec. 10 and 11, just three months ago. Is it to be supposed that the despatches have not yet reached England? If so, there has been a great irregularity; and if they have, their non-appearance would seem to be a rather unaccountable omission. The failure of the War Office to issue the documents is naturally creating a good deal of comment. It has never yet been clearly explained how two companies of the 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers were taken prisoners at Colenso on Dec. 15. These are all matters of such general interest that it is difficult to understand the reasons which actuate the authorities in withholding information which is eagerly awaited by those who are endeavouring to follow the course of the campaign. We trust, therefore, that steps may be taken to produce the despatches on an early date.

The foreign Service papers, which have so long been denouncing our methods in South Africa, have not very much to say about our successes, though they fully recognise their almost decisive character. The France Militaire, chronicling in one column "A British Defeat," is constrained to admit in the next that Cronje's position when it wrote was absolutely desperate. The same paper deals at some length with the military lessons to be drawn, chiefly depending upon German authorities. It appears that Captain Fritz Hoenig, to whose recent discussion of the war in the North American Review we have referred, has been passing unfavourable judgments upon our gunners. The guns, he says, should be in the right place at the right time, and should be served well, and in these matters he thinks we have not been efficient, attributing the want to our system of training and to the instruction given to the men. It does not appear that Captain Hoenig is well informed as to what our gunners have actually been doing in South Africa. On the whole he does not seem to have a very high opinion of the value of guns, which he believes have proved rather disappointing on the whole. Major Albrecht, the captured German gunner, wrote a letter on December 17 to the Anhaltsche Staatsanzeiger, in which he made the remark that the artillery upon the defensive had no very brilliant role, and that in the attack its effect had been over-estimated. The guns make a great noise, and may have a considerable moral effect, but they are not decisive, and the result is achieved by the actual combat of infantry or cavalry. "In ten minutes the result of the battles of Colenso and Magersfontein was decided; in five minutes Buller lost his guns," therefore, says Major Albrecht, "the victory falls to efficient rifle-fire, and by no means to the long-range work of artillery."

The Progres Militaire records our success without special comment, remarking that the Boers are withdrawing their forces to find a better position to resist the invader. The first act of the war seems to have been played in two scenes—the victorious but partial occupation of Natal by the Transvaal and Free State Boers, and the complete repulse of the enemy's forces by the British, "who have cleverly replaced an expectant defensive by a bold offensive policy." For the rest, the Progres is content to reproduce the despatches.

The Militar-Wochenblatt discusses at some length, and with approval, the strategy of Lord Roberts, though its article was written before that strategy had attained its full effect. The German organ was "afraid" that the movement made by General MacDonald to Koodoosberg had attracted Cronje's attention too much to his right flank, and that he rather overlooked the great danger that threatened his communications. The Wochenblatt devotes a great deal of attention to the operations on the Tugela, which had not, as it wrote, resulted in the relief of Ladysmith, and has many hard things to say as to the way in which the troops were handled. Sir Redvers Buller was not guided by the German maxim "Erst wagen, dann wagen." His knowledge of the country, whether proceeding from defective maps or from insufficient intelligence, was inadequate, and, at Spion Kop, the details of the operation were not properly co-ordinated. Similar considerations are offered in regard to the attack on Vaal Krantz, and the Wochenblatt was of the opinion that our various retirements were the least part of the evil, for that great dangers attended our position on the river, our communications being open to attack. At the same time the Wochenblatt suggests that Sir Redvers Buller's assault may have been dictated by the idea of retaining the Boers outside Ladysmith while Lord Roberts's operations were being prepared on the other side, but it remarks that he paid very dearly for his success in this matter.

We confess that we do not at all like that part of the Government proposals which comes under the head of Royal Reserve Battalions. To offer old soldiers a grant of £22 to return to the colours for twelve months seems rather an extravagant way of augmenting the Army. It will take fully three months before it can reasonably be expected that the units thus to be raised will be effective; nine months afterwards they will presumably be disbanded. Having regard to the liberal terms offered, the men will, of course, be forthcoming, but this feature of the scheme is admittedly only a makeshift, and makeshifts are always objectionable. The fact that such an idea for raising men has had to be suggested shows at once how little the Militia is appreciated and understood at the present time at the War Office, for these 45,000 men could all have been obtained for £5 a head at the outside, and for six years at least, if the advice of the Militia officers had been called for. It is a detail of the Government scheme which the Service Members, we are glad to learn, are not losing sight of. We trust, nay, believe, that in the end good will result from this departure. This certainly will be the case if the members of the Service Members' Committee are true to themselves. It is for them now to accept the proposals of the Government in a proper spirit. They can only be viewed as experiments. The value of these experiments will depend, of course, upon the manner in which they are carried out. That they will cost a considerable sum of money goes without saying, but makeshift expedients invariably do. The general scheme for the reorganisation and augmentation of the Army has still to be drawn up, and for all we know the formation of reserve battalions may have been decided upon as a means to an end. At any rate we trust so, as the expenditure on other grounds would appear scarcely to have been justified. It is hoped that it will add some 45,000 men to the strength of our available forces, but the very cost of them ought to convince any reasonable man that there is something radically wrong in the military affairs of the nation. If our Army were equal to the wants of our Empire, such extravagance would be unnecessary. However, we are satisfied to wait the outcome of events, feeling confident that Parliament, having had its eyes opened, will not rest satisfied when the war is over until the affairs of the Army are placed on a sounder and more practical basis. We could have no stronger proof of the absolute rottenness of the existing system than the fact that there is at present no Militia officer at the headquarters staff to act as adviser to the Minister for War. Had there been, the Royal Reserve Battalions would scarcely have been suggested, we venture to think.

The initial steps have been taken for raising the new Line Battalions. Majors the Hon. C. Lambton, D.S.O., and G.T.L. Armstrong are promoted to the command of the new 3rd and 4th Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers; Majors P. Schletter and D'O. C. Grattan, of the 3rd and 4th Batns. King's (Liverpool) Regiment; Brevet-Lieut. Colonel G. W. H. Pain, of the 3rd Batn. Wiltshire Regiment; Major E. V. Bellers, of the 3rd Batn. Middlesex Regiment; Major J. P. Gethin, of the 3rd Batn. Manchester Regiment; and Major B. E. Hawkes, of the 3rd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers; whilst three special selections are made: Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel C. R. Simpson, 1st Batn. Lincolnshire Regiment, being promoted to the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the 4th Batn. Middlesex Regiment; Major L. L. Steele, 1st Batn. Wiltshire Regiment, to that of the 4th Batn. Manchester Regiment; and Major R. S. H. Moody, 1st. Batn. of the Buffs, to that of the 4th Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers. It will be seen that the War Office is losing no time in bringing the new units into existence. Other appointments will be made in due course. In making these, advantage will be taken of the opportunity for giving promotion to officers of other regiments whose progress has been retarded. The new 4th Batns. of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, Royal Fusiliers and Lancashire Fusiliers, sanctioned in 1898, are also being raised. Major H. E. Irwin has been selected for the command of the 4th Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment; Major F. C. Annesley for that of the 4th Batn. Royal Fusiliers, and Major

F. Hammersley for that of the 4th Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers. The formation of fifteen battalions will naturally have the effect of helping on promotion all round for the next few years.

It is to be regretted that Lord Lansdowne's new proposals for augmenting the mobile artillery of the Army do not include the provision of some heavy field batteries. The proposal to re-arm the Volunteer position batteries with 4.7 quick-firing guns will not meet the case, which seems to have been made out for taking a proportion of heavy batteries into the field to act side by side with the lighter batteries of horse and field artillery. Something more advanced is now required than the primitive methods adopted in Natal for carrying the Naval guns packed on waggons drawn by oxen. The necessity for having a certain number of permanent heavy batteries specially equipped and horsed so as to ensure a maximum amount of mobility would seem to be one of the lessons taught by General Buller's battles on the Tugela. The difficulty under the present War Office organisation is to know to whom to look for initiating improvements in artillery equipment, seeing that there is now no Deputy-Adjutant-General for Artillery, and the Commander-in-Chief and other heads of the War Office, even if they are artillery officers, have no time to devote to technical questions of this nature.

All interested in the subject of military maps would do well to read the lecture delivered by Colonel Sir Thomas Holdich, R.E., at the Royal United Service Institution on Wednesday. Sir Thomas was for years employed on survey work in India, and has only just retired. He is in favour of the plane table, which, he contends, is a much more practical instrument for rough surveys than the prismatic compass or the theodolite. The work done in India under the head of survey has been stupendous; but, as the lecturer on Wednesday made clear, under the Indian system large tracts of country can be properly "mapped" in the course of a few months, whereas the Ordnance Survey would take years to do the same work. It would be done more perfectly, of course, by the Ordnance Survey Staff, but that is not all that is required. Had the Indian system been in operation in South Africa our Generals and Staff Officers would not have laboured under some at least of the disadvantages which they have done—disadvantages that are not at once apparent to home critics, but which have had much to do with the failure of plans of campaign, nevertheless, as Sir William Gatacre learnt to his cost in his attack on the Boer position at Stormberg.

An Army Order was issued on Tuesday, intimating that "Her Majesty the Queen is pleased to order that in future, upon St. Patrick's Day, all ranks in Her Majesty's Irish regiments shall wear, as a distinction, a sprig of shamrock in their headdress, to commemorate the gallantry of her Irish soldiers during the recent battles in South Africa."

Mr. T. G. Bowles put a question to the Under-Secretary of State for War, on Tuesday evening which was "satirical like." He desired to know on what dates Lord Roberts, Lord Kitchener, General French, Lord Dundonald, and Major-Gen. Hector MacDonald passed from the Staff College. Evidently Mr. Bowles does not quite believe in the Staff College training. Now, no graduate of the College would desire it to be supposed that generals are made at Camberley. What the Staff College aims at is to fit officers for the duties of the Staff. This it does. Their curriculum of study might hitherto have been of the most practical kind; but it has to be remembered that the small wars in which our Army has been engaged of late years have not done much to help the College, for there have been few deductions to be drawn from them. In South Africa our Army is gaining experience of a most useful kind, and it may reasonably be expected that the lessons of our present campaign will be taken to heart. If they are, it will tend greatly to assist our military authorities in reforming the Staff College, as other departments of the Army will doubtless be reformed as a natural consequence of the first big war in which British troops have played a part for close on forty-five years.

Having contended many times that the training of the Staff College was open to objection, we are now disposed to question this contention of those who complain that it has not produced all the good that has been expected of it. Generals, it has been said, truthfully, are born not made. So, too, are staff officers. It was on these grounds that a decision was come to some years ago to provide a list of officers who had been noted for special fitness for staff service in the performance of staff duties in the field. Those in this category have most of them done remarkably well afterwards in any positions in which they have been tried. The Staff College, however, has its uses, and to argue that the money spent upon it is wasted would be as much as to say that the study of their profession by officers is a thing to be discouraged, and there are few, we believe, who would care to go so far. It will be well for Mr. Bowles and those who think with him to await the outcome of the Boer War. They will find then, no doubt, that the Staff College will rise to the occasion, and institute changes in its system which many of the best-known graduates have long thought to be necessary. Our duty for the moment is to watch and wait.

The Counties Volunteer Development Association is a body to be encouraged despite the length of its name. Its object, as defined at the Westminster Guildhall on Tuesday, when the Association had its birth, is to secure the proper development and equipment of the Volunteer force by such means, whether out of national or other funds, as may be from time to time determined, and to press upon Parliament and the Government the adoption of such measures as may ensure the absolute efficiency of the Volunteer force so as to enable them to promptly take their place beside the regular and militia forces in time of emergency. The movement has support of forty-four County Councils, and judging from the fact that several members of both Houses of Parliament were present at its inauguration on Tuesday of a good many influential persons besides. The Earl of Dartmouth was appointed chairman, and Sir A. Acland Hood vice-chairman, and it was decided to press on the Government the necessity of amending the Military Lands Act in order to invest County Councils with compulsory powers to acquire ranges, ground for drill halls, and the like.

THE RESERVE OF OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—There are many officers on the Reserve List most anxious for employment. May I ask in your columns why their services are not made use of by the War Office? By giving them employment it would enable officers of the Regulars now holding appointments on the staff, Volunteer adjutancies, &c., in England, to rejoin their battalions in South Africa, where the casualties have been considerable, and experienced men, not boys, are absolutely required.

AN OFFICER.

A Royal Warrant was promulgated by the Secretary for War, which states that, it being deemed expedient to make provision for the grant of gratuities at a higher rate to soldiers awarded medals for distinguished conduct in the field, the Queen has ordered that such soldiers shall, on discharge or transfer to the Reserve, receive a gratuity of £20 if not granted an extra pension under Article 1,166 or an annuity under Article 1,251 of the Royal Warrant for the pay and non-effective pay of the Army.

The following gentlemen have consented to become Vice-Presidents of the Navy League:—Rear-Adm. H. H. Beamish, C.B., Gen. Right. Hon. Lord Chelmsford, G.C.B., Major-Gen. H. G. Degacher, C.B., Adm. Order promulgated in the District Orders at Aldershot:—"As the welfare of the patients in hospital is in a great measure dependent on the class of men detailed for duty as orderlies thereto, the General Commanding desires that the greatest discrimination should be exercised in the selection of these men, and only those of good character, and who can read and write, are to be employed on this important duty."

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, March 3.

The relieving force, headed by Sir Redvers Buller, marched through Ladysmith to-day. The streets were lined by the garrison, and there was a great display of Union Jacks. Sir George White and his staff stood in front of the Town Hall as the force marched past. Sir Redvers Buller halted and exchanged greetings with the defender of Ladysmith. The column was headed by the Fusilier Brigade, the 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers leading the way, followed by the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish, 1st Batn. Royal Welsh, and 2nd Batn. Scottish.

Gen. Buller issued a general order in regard to the relief of Ladysmith, saying:—

"Two forces have, during the last few months, striven with conspicuous gallantry and splendid determination to maintain the honour of their Queen and country. The Ladysmith garrison, during four months, held its position against every attack with complete success, and endured many privations with admirable fortitude. The relieving force had to force its way through an unknown country, across an unfordable river, over almost inaccessible heights, in face of a fully-prepared, well-armed, and tenacious enemy. By the exhibition of the truest courage, the courage that burns steadily, besides flashing brilliantly, the force accomplished its object and added a glorious page to the history of the British Empire. Ladysmith has been successfully held and relieved. Sailors and soldiers, colonial and homeborn, have done this, united by one desire, inspired by one patriotism."

In conclusion, Gen. Buller congratulated both forces on the martial qualities which they had displayed, thanked them for their determined efforts, and expressed sincere sympathy with the relatives and friends of their gallant comrades who had fallen.

Sunday, March 4.

Lord Roberts, in a despatch from Osfontein, dated yesterday morning, reported the departure of the Boer prisoners from Modder River, and mentioned that Gen. Cronje and Comdt. Wolmarans had expressed their acknowledgment of the kind treatment they and their men had received.

Monday, March 5.

Stormberg was reoccupied to-day. Gen. Gatacre informed Lord Roberts yesterday that the number of Boers occupying that place had been of late daily reduced. Early that morning it was found that the Boers had entirely evacuated the place, taking with them all their guns. Later in the morning Gen. Gatacre entered the town unopposed. The possession of Stormberg put Gatacre in railway communication with Gen. Clements at Colesberg. The Boers had partially wrecked the railway between the two places, but it is being rapidly repaired.

Brig.-Gen. Brabant gained a complete victory over the Boers this morning at Labuschaghes Nek, about six miles from Dordrecht. His force consisted of about 1,800 men, made up of Colonials, with a small leaven of Regulars. He moved from Dordrecht on Saturday, and having secured a strong position which the Boers had temporarily vacated, thoroughly reconnoitred the surrounding country during Sunday, and the enemy returning to the hill, they were met with a heavy fire; a stiff engagement ensued, in which our artillery did excellent work. After a day's fighting the enemy beat a retreat, leaving many dead on the field. Gen. Brabant reports that all ranks on our side fought splendidly.

Sir Redvers Buller reported that Natal was practically clear of the enemy, and that he could not hear of any formed body anywhere. The Boers left behind some ambulances full of their sick and wounded, the mules having been taken away for transport purposes.

Tuesday, March 6.

Lord Roberts telegraphed during the morning that Gen. Gatacre occupied Stormberg yesterday, and that Gen. Clements was at Joubert's Siding, one station beyond Colesberg. Scouting parties which had pushed forward towards Norval's Pont had found the enemy still occupying the hills on the south side of the Orange River, both the bridges being intact. Railway communication between Colesberg and Cape Town had been reopened.

Wednesday, March 7.

Lord Roberts achieved another signal success by routing the Boer forces which had collected in extensive and strongly-entrenched positions a few miles east of Osfontein. The first intimation of the victory was contained in a despatch from Lord Roberts dated from Osfontein at 4.30 p.m., saying that the operations of the day promised to be a great success. The enemy occupied a position extending four miles north and 11 miles south of the Modder. Lord Roberts placed one infantry division on the north bank and two more, with the cavalry division, on the south bank. The cavalry succeeded in turning the enemy's left flank, opening the road for the 6th Division, which advanced without for some time being obliged to fire a shot. The enemy took to flight towards the north and east, being closely followed by the cavalry, horse artillery, and mounted infantry, under Gen. French, while the 8th

Colonel J. H. Yule, invalided from Ladysmith just before the siege, has arrived at Cimiez with Mrs. Yule. He is still in bad health, but rest and change of air had produced a good effect.

Major L. Dundas, D.S.O., late of the King's Regiment, Deputy Governor of Portland Prison, has been appointed Governor of Maidstone Prison.

In honour of Lord Roberts, and in sympathy with him on the loss of his only son, the residents of Hampton placed on Wednesday numerous wreaths on the grave in Hampton Churchyard of his mother, Lady Roberts, who died at Hampton Court Palace on March 7, 1882, aged eighty-three.

Major R. P. M. Syngé, Reserve of Officers (late Highland Light Infantry), has taken up duty with the Provisional Battalion at Shorncliffe.

SOME MAGAZINES.

We have no space to-day to deal with the magazines, which nevertheless maintain a high level and are generally interesting. In the Nineteenth Century Mr. Sidney Low expresses the opinion that our system of voluntary enlistment has broken down, and that the proposals of the Government are astounding, if they are not merely an emergency programme. He has great faith in the Militia ballot as a remedy. Lord Northbrook points out in a brief note the fallacy implied in the figures presented by Lord Lansdowne to the House of Lords on February 12. Lord Denman devotes an article to Mounted Infantry, of which he thinks we have a great need. His view is that the mounted infantryman must be both a scout and a skirmisher, and that once he has been put on horseback he will disdain the routine work of infantry, and must be despatched forthwith to a special class of the reserve. In Blackwood there is a proposal for amalgamating the Dutch Republics in British territory, dividing the whole into provinces, each with a governor appointed by the Crown, and a Legislative Assembly, and with a Governor-General aided by a Council to have supreme control over the civil and military affairs of all the provinces, there being a Secretary of State for Africa with an Advisory Council at home. The Military contributor continues his criticisms, the tone of which will be inferred from his remarks: "Are there no heads left in Natal? It would seem so. If there are, the Boers have the monopoly." "Our generals must now move with the age and try to get a bit 'forwarder.' The lessons of the Peninsula must be rewritten with a quick-firing pen." The critic has the supreme satisfaction of recognising the splendid work of Lords Roberts and Kitchener, and of recording the result. Harper and Badminton are both good illustrated numbers, and the former has an article upon Pretoria and the aggrieved Boer, as well as a very interesting paper by Mr. Poultney Bigelow on "Germany's First Colony in China." Feilden's Magazine is distinguished by a capital article from the pen of Mr. H. L. Swinburne, upon "The Balloon as a War Machine," which is extremely instructive. We specially commend an admirable article in Macmillan by Lieut.-Col. Wilmoughby Verner on the "Naval Brigade at Graspan," and another by Mr. David Hannay on "The Sanity of Wellington," which may be commended to those who are inclined to depreciate the great general. In the Cornhill, Sir John Robinson's "South African Reminiscences" are interesting. The Pall Mall Magazine has produced an excellent number, which includes capital articles on the "King's Royal Rifles," and on "Ambulance Nursing, Past and Present," all very well illustrated. We have also received Longman's Magazine, the English Illustrated Magazine, the Humanitarian, the Genealogical Magazine, the Antiquary, and some others. The United Service Institution Journal for February is a particularly good number, and has practical value in containing a précis by Lieut.-Col. Gunter of Von Löbell's "Reports on Military Progress" in regard to the tactics of the various arms.

The United Service Magazine. The present number is full of interesting matter. Mr. O'Connor Morris continues his valuable series of papers on "Marlborough." He treats now of Eugene and Villars. Denain, the Peace of Utrecht, the Peace of Baden, the state of Europe and France after the war, and the last years and death of Marlborough. "The War Medals of Sixty Years," are treated of by Capt. G. F. MacMunn, R.A., "Some Aphorisms of Napoleon," by Capt. R. G. Burton, I.S.C., show the writer to have studied carefully the life of the great general. "The Militia, Past, Present, and Future," by Major Telfer-Smollett, appears opportunely at a time when the old constitutional force is again playing its part so admirably, and promises to emerge from the ordeal of active service with fresh credit. "The French Army under the Empire," by Major-Gen. F. H. Tyrrell, gives an immense amount of useful information, which can only have been attained from careful study. "The Empire and the War," by Mr. C. de Thierry, is marked by that grasp which might be expected from this thoughtful and able writer, who is thorough in all he does in a literary sense. Capt. F. Green, Yorkshire Dragoons, treats of the "Future of the Yeomanry," offering some practical suggestions which ought not to be disregarded when the hour of reform comes. "Our Disasters and Their Causes," by Major-Gen. F. W. Stubbs, defends our generals, and shows what valuable lessons are to be learnt from the war. Major-Gen. G. E. Turner, R.A., is always readable, and in dealing with "Molke's Strategy in Dealing with the French Republic," he proves once again how closely he has followed the events of the period. Major J. H. Wylly describes the "Colt Gun and Dundonald Gun Carriage," both of which seem destined to play an important part in future warfare.

THE RULE OF THE ROAD

THE important case in connection with the Sans Pareil collision, to which attention has already been drawn in the columns, passed into another stage last week, when judgment was pronounced by Mr. Justice Gorell Barnes. The facts in connection with the case do not appear to have been seriously in dispute. On August 7, 1899, a collision occurred between the Sans Pareil and the sailing vessel East Lothian, the latter vessel being at the time in tow of the tug Sir W. T. Lewis. The tug was exhibiting the usual lights for a tug having a vessel in tow, except that the white light she showed abaft the mainmast for the sailing vessel to steer by should not have been visible forward of the beam, whereas in fact it was visible to some extent forward of the beam. The East Lothian had the regulation lights. The Sans Pareil was one of a fleet proceeding up Channel, there being about thirty ships in all in the fleet, arranged in the following formation:—"The ships were in four lines, the distance between each ship was about eight cables, and the distance from the bow of one vessel to the bow of the vessel behind her was about two cables. The outer lines were formed by cruisers and the inner of battleships. The Sans Pareil was the leading ship of the more southerly line of battleships. She had all the lights prescribed by the Queen's regulations burning." All the vessels in the fleet were proceeding on the same course, S. 72 deg. E., at a speed of about ten knots. The tug and tow sighted the fleet when about six miles distant, and broad on the port bow. The two ships kept their course and speed, thus standing right across the track of the fleet, with the certainty that if all the vessels involved held on to their course a collision was highly probable. The tug and tow cleared the Europa, which was leading the starboard or southernmost line of cruisers, that vessel porting her helm to pass astern of the East Lothian. As they drew near to the Sans Pareil this vessel also ported to pass under the stern of the tug, but the officer of the watch, being under the impression that the Sir W. T. Lewis was a steamer proceeding alone, starboarded his helm as soon as the battleship was in a position to pass clear of her, and this was done. Shortly afterwards he saw the red, or port, light of the East Lothian, and although he put his engines full speed astern, it was too late to prevent a collision, and the sailing vessel was sunk, happily without loss of life.

The defence of the Admiralty to the claim for damages was twofold. In the first place that the tug infringed the regulations by exhibiting a light to guide the vessel astern which showed forward of the beam instead of only abaft the beam. In regard to this point the Court held that the tug had infringed the regulations, but Mr. Justice Barnes stated that he was advised by the Trinity Masters, who sat with him as assessors, that this circumstance could by no possibility have contributed to the collision, and therefore he could not make the infringement of the rule a ground for blame. The second portion of the defence is much more important; it was in effect that the tug and tow infringed the regulations by standing on across the track of the fleet. The ordinary rule of the road is, as every seaman knows, that when two steam vessels are crossing so as to involve risk of collision the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side is to keep out of the way of the other, while the other is to keep her course and speed. But there are several rules which modify this one, and particularly one that says that due regard shall be had to all dangers of navigation and collision, and to any special circumstances which may render a departure from the rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger. The contention of the Attorney-General, who represented the Admiralty, was that for the tug and tow to continue their course across the bows of a fleet of thirty vessels was a violation of the last-named regulation, the circumstances being of the special nature specifically referred to therein. Moreover, he was able to support this contention by reference to a notice issued by the Board of Trade, in which masters of ships are warned to take measures for keeping out of the way of, and to avoid passing through, a fleet of warships. The Court, however, after having taken the opinion of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, disallowed the contention of the Admiralty, and held "that the position and movements of the fleet did not constitute such a danger of navigation or collision, or such circumstances as to render it necessary for the tug and tow to wait till the fleet had passed, or to starboard and go under the stern of the fleet; in other words, they do not consider that the tug and tow acted improperly in this case in proceeding as they did, and that the Sans Pareil and the other vessels of the fleet could, without difficulty or danger, though possibly not without some inconvenience, have avoided them." Judgment was, therefore, given against the Sans Pareil. This decision will, in all likelihood, be made the subject of appeal, and accordingly it is not permissible at present to offer any criticism upon it. At the same time the importance of the questions raised is indisputable. It might have been supposed that, as a matter of ordinary precaution, the master of any merchantman who saw that he was running the risk, perhaps of collision, but in any case of disorganising a fleet of men-of-war, would, if the circumstances permitted, stand out of their way. Such, however, is not the case, and it is altogether exceptional for a merchant ship to attempt anything of the kind. Nor would a rule or prohibition to the contrary be of value unless it was accepted by all maritime Powers, and when such was proposed at the Washington Conference it was rejected. At that time, however, there were several Powers whose fleets were not on the same scale as it is now contemplated to make them, and it is possible that this circumstance might have its weight. It is possible, too that, had the decision of the Judge been in favour of the Sans Pareil, an opening might have been given for once more consulting the Great Powers with a view to bringing about an international agreement on the subject.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

THE publication of the text of the Nicaragua Canal Treaty has not given great satisfaction in the United States. It was hoped to win from the Clayton-Bulwer arrangement exclusive control in peace and war over that waterway which was to bind the two coasts together, but the principle of strict neutralisation having been conceded, it now appears to some American Naval writers that England, with her greatly superior Naval force, will have effective control of the canal in the event of war. In the Senate the chief opposition is raised by Senators Hoar and Hawley, who base their hostility to the Treaty upon the ground that the canal might almost as well be made by England for all the special value it will afford to the United States. The navigation of the canal is to be entirely unrestricted both in peace and war; it is never to be blockaded; no act of hostility is to be committed within it; the vessels of belligerents are to pass through with the least possible delay—not using it to re-victual or take in stores, "except so far as may be strictly necessary"; and no belligerent is to embark or disembark troops or warlike materials in the canal, except in case of accidental hindrance, and then the "transit is to be resumed with all possible despatch."

It must be confessed that there is something very elastic in these conditions, and that, after all, in case of war—when, as the Army and Navy Journal says, "treaties shrivel up like parchment in the flames"—real control of the canal must naturally fall to the superior Sea Power. Such conditions, however, attend all international agreements dealing with like matters, and, in practice, a great deal must be left to the Powers concerned, for no means of controlling their action is in existence. At the same time, the public sense will generally lead to the observance of Treaty clauses, and the United States themselves, like the Spaniards, held to the provisions of the Declaration of Paris during the recent war when either of them might have disregarded them at will.

A great deal has been made of the provision prohibiting fortification of the canal, but an American Naval officer has pointed out with much cogency that such fortifications would prove valueless in time of war, and he declares that the protests against the prohibition of defence are based on misapprehension or ignorance. His argument is that forts and batteries are useless to protect a waterway, and he affirms that they could not prevent a blockade, or defend the interior locks and dams. His general conclusion is that command of the sea is the only logical and real defence, and that the key of the situation will be found in the Caribbean Sea. "Ships, not forts mobility of movement, not immobility, mus therefore dominate the situation." Therefore the United States must own an adequate Navy, and one strong in battleships and armoured cruisers, it being always borne in mind that the parties concerned in any dispute as to the canal will be the great Powers. According to Senator Davis, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, it would take from 50,000,000 dollars to 80,000,000 dollars to fortify the canal, and this sum would be thrown away upon useless fortifications, while it might be very much better spent in strengthening the Navy. We have so often expressed similar views ourselves that we cannot differ from Senator Davis, and meanwhile, according to the provisions of the Treaty, fortification of the canal is prohibited.

Naval Notes.

The Ladysmith Naval Brigade consisting of the officers and 250 men, arrived at Durban on Thursday and were accorded a most enthusiastic reception. The station was lined with men from the Terrible, and the meeting of old comrades gave rise to many touching scenes. An enormous crowd had assembled outside the station, and when the seamen marched into the street, headed by the band and flags of the Terrible, and carrying the tattered Union Jack from the Powerful, which had flown throughout the siege, the cheering was tremendous. In a shed adjacent to the station, which was appropriately decorated, an excellent lunch had been prepared, and of this all the men heartily partook. The majority looked well, though they showed signs of the rough work and privations which they had undergone. The officers were the guests of Captain Scott at the Navy Club. In the course of the proceedings the Mayor of Durban cordially welcomed the brigade back, and fittingly acknowledged their gallant services to the colony, and particularly to Ladysmith, which was enabled, by their noble efforts to withstand the hottest bombardment and attack of the enemy. The Mayor also announced that Captain Scott now ceases to act as commander at Durban, as the Terrible was proceeding to China forthwith.

If rumour is to be trusted, the fiat will shortly go forth to withdraw all the naval brigades from South Africa. Such a course can surprise no one, since the emergency which called for their services is now admittedly past. The brigade under Captain Lambton which was locked up in Ladysmith, has already been withdrawn, with the exception of those men who were too unwell to travel. That under Captain Jones will probably follow very quickly, since its guns can no longer have the value in the altered circumstances which they have hitherto possessed. In the western sphere of operations similar conditions will presently rule, as it is hardly likely that Lord Roberts will want to drag the naval guns about with him in his hurried marches. But, although we may feel that the time has come for withdrawing the seamen and marines, we should be very sorry to see a hard and fast line laid down against the employment of Naval brigades for service on shore, such as Sir John Colomb appeared to suggest the other day. The commander-in-chief on each station, or the senior Naval officer present must in each instance be guided by his instructions and by circumstances. There was not the least reason to suppose that demands would be made upon the services of the ships on the Cape station other than they could have fulfilled with reduced crews.

Cases may even occur where, without loss of efficiency, ships may be even left with a still smaller proportion of officers and men on board. We recall two important instances where vessels were left with barely a third of their company. In 1863 the Gold Coast Artillery mutinied, and shortly afterwards the Ashantees invaded the territory. A Naval force was landed, and after providing for its wants the Commodore in his flagship with only 120 officers and men proceeded to Ascension to obtain further supplies.

Again, in 1879, the Commodore in the Active at the Cape had barely 100 men to work his flagship in the boisterous weather that sometimes obtains off the African coast. Their comrades were in Zululand. It would be a mistake to lay down any stringent rule to govern such cases. Lord Mansfield remarks in his commentaries that commanders in time of war must, in the interests of the nation, resort to extreme measures and exact implicit obedience. In the present day we should hope that no captain of a British man-of-war would hesitate in his duty even if he had more than half his ship's company employed in operation on shore.

Referring to our remarks in last week's issue relative to the proposed Royal Sailors' Home at Chatham clashing with the institution on temperance lines contemplated by the Bishop of Rochester, Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, informed the Morning Post on 3rd inst. that the home he is interested in is not a rival scheme to the Naval Church Institute; that there is room for both, and they are patronised by Rear-Admiral S. C. Holland and himself. We trust that with such excellent and distinguished support the two establishments may prove successful. The late Vice-Admiral P. H. Colomb, in a letter to the Times of July 10 last called the attention of the lord-bishop to the exceedingly good moral tone that obtained at the Portsmouth Home, although intoxicating liquors were procurable; and preferred the method pursued there to the system of "welcomes" and "soldiers' institutes" favoured by his lordship. Admiral Colomb believed he had the support of the Bishop of Newcastle, who was for many years one of the leaders of the reforming committee who put a moribund institution on its legs and made it a prosperous undertaking. The Bishop of Rochester and the naval officers of the Nore command are working for the promotion of the comfort of many thousands of men passing through the Eastern dépôt, and although their methods differ, everyone will hope for the success their efforts deserve.

The good shooting of our naval gunners ashore in South Africa has already been referred to in these columns. A correspondent of one of the morning papers in describing the battle of Pieter's Hill, mentions an instance perhaps still more remarkable than those already cited. He says that on two occasions a gunner was told to bring down a man, and he did it in each instance. It would be a puzzle to determine what became of the men. One was a Boer who got out of a trench and was standing upon a low wall in front coolly firing at the advancing infantry. The gunner was asked to bring down the bold Boer—with the 4.7in. gun, too. He did it, the shell striking the wall under the man's feet, and bursting on its impact, blew away the parapet and the man. Another Boer emulating the one who had disappeared in lyddite, executed the same heroic deed. The next moment the gunner scattered his remains on high. The correspondent adds:—With shooting like this, the experience of those behind the trenches must have been truly awful. It was a grand exhibition from our side of the destructive power of massed artillery.

Martial law in Durban appears to be carried out with a strictness which might conceivably be followed with advantage elsewhere. Early in last month a local paper published a leader commenting on the reverse at Spion Kop. We have not the paper before us so cannot say what line was taken by our colonial contemporary, or in what way it transgressed. Action, however, was prompt. The Commandant of Durban, Captain Percy Scott, despatched an officer to the newspaper building with the following instructions:—"Clear out the people, seize all copies of the papers, obtain the keys, lock up and close the building." A bluejacket wrote "Shut" in chalk on the door, the editor was put in prison, and thus without any fuss justice was satisfied. Apparently they understand how to deal with the Press in Durban, and the world would probably be none the worse if similar treatment were accorded one or two busybody papers in this country.

The case for the retention of a training squadron, of which so much has lately been heard, was mentioned in Parliament by Mr. Gibson-Bowles, and his criticisms drew an interesting explanation from the First Lord. Mr. Goschen admitted that he personally was disposed to favour the retention, but had been influenced by the views of his naval advisers, including three naval Commanders-in-Chief. Officers of great experience have reported that they find no difference in the smartness of men who have not passed through the training squadron, and it is evident from Mr. Goschen's explanation that the weight of naval opinion is in favour of the abolition. Mr. Goschen also defended the entry of older recruits for the seaman branch by stating that such recruits had been most favourably reported upon. The increased age of entry for Britannia cadets and the curtailment of the Britannia course was also touched upon. Our junior officers afloat have been found just as capable by commanding officers, whilst the curtailment of the training at Dartmouth has materially augmented the supply of young officers. It is possible, however, that the Admiralty may be inclined to revert to two years' training at Dartmouth when the executive lists have been sufficiently strengthened.

In reply to a point raised by Mr. Bowles the First Lord has promised to lay on the table the instructions given to the captains of ships engaged in search for contraband of war off Delago Bay. These should be of great interest, although, as Mr. Goschen said, the circumstances in which this search have had to be conducted are very exceptional. After all, the detention and search of a few foreign vessels which proved to be guiltless is not a vital matter. Other Powers have frequently exercised the rights of search with greater rigour.

Ascension Island is now in direct telegraphic communication with Europe, the Eastern Telegraph Company having completed the cable from St. Vincent, Cape de Verde Islands to our naval establishment on the South Atlantic on the 22nd ult. Messages from South Africa will be greatly facilitated, and the time in transmission considerably reduced.

The following are the notes which appeared in the First Lord's memorandum on the subject of the Engineers:—

The promotion, status, and pay of Engineer Officers have been recently considered by a Committee of the Board, with the result that the following changes have been approved:—

The list of Chief Inspectors of Machinery has been increased from 5 to 8, and that of Inspectors of Machinery from 8 to 13.

The Engineer-in-Chief has been given the relative rank of a Rear-Admiral.

The rank of Staff-Engineer has been abolished. Chief Engineers will rank with Lieutenants of and above 8 years' seniority, while Engineers on promotion will rank with Lieutenants of less than 8 years' seniority, instead of as now, with but after Lieutenants.

In other respects the relative rank of Engineer officers remains unchanged.

Engineers will be given a new scale of pay, viz.:—
On promotion 10s. a day.
After 4 years 11s. "
After 8 years 12s. "
And the allowance of 1s. a day at present paid to Senior Engineers for all ships will be replaced by a scale varying, according to responsibility, from 1s. to 2s. 6d. a day.

Navy Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir J. E. Commerell, V.C., Admirals Sir E. Ommanney and the Right Hon. Sir John Hay, Bart., and Captain H.S.H. Prince Louis of Battenberg, attended the annual meeting of the Royal United Service Institution on Saturday last, at which the Duke of Cambridge presided. Lord Chelmsford, in seconding the adoption of the report, referred to the regret felt at the death of Vice-Admiral P. H. Colomb, one of the oldest members of the institution, and one who had largely devoted himself to its interests.

Vice-Admiral C. S. Cardale, whose retirement on the 3rd inst. gives Captain H. J. Grenfell flag rank, instead of being placed on the retired list, need not have left the active list until April next year. Devonport is largely indebted to him for his assistance in its principal charitable institutions, and it is hoped that he will be able to continue such generous aid for many years in the future of that important port.

Lord Charles Beresford was re-elected Commodore of the Royal Temple Yacht Club last week. His lordship was entertained at dinner on Saturday last by the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers at Malta.

Rear-Admiral Sir R. Harris, Commander-in-Chief at the Cape of Good Hope, has been informed by the Admiralty that the Board desire to express to the Naval and Marine officers and the bluejackets and marines who have been engaged in the successful operations in Natal and the Cape Colony, the sense of their lordships' great admiration of the splendid manner in which they have upheld the traditions of the service and added to its reputation for resourcefulness, courage and devotion.

Captain G. A. Giffard, of the Comus, left Barbados on Saturday last to pay off that vessel and commission the Charybdis at Devonport.

Captain H. T. Grenfell, of the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, Captain Peyton Hoskyns, and Captain F. C. D. Sturdee had the honour of being decorated by Her Majesty, on Thursday in last week at Windsor, with the Companionship of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Captain E. J. Fleet, of the Edgar, left Plymouth last week for China with relief crews of vessels on that station, and proceeds via the Suez Canal, and not by way of the Cape of Good Hope, as reported.

Captain Percy Scott's mountings for naval guns at the front in South Africa have won for him golden opinions. He served in the Active on the Cape station from 1873-7, under Commodore Sir William Hewitt, but there were no wars then in South Africa. It was reserved for him to find a large field for his ability nearly half a century afterwards in Natal.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton and the Naval Brigade left Ladysmith on Tuesday last to join the Powerful in Simon's Bay. Lieutenants A. W. Heneagh and M. H. Hodges, and Midshipman A. Stokes are left behind, not having sufficiently recovered from enteric fever.

Captain J. H. Henderson, of the Hermes, found himself off Cates I., Bahamas, last week, with a propeller shaft of that vessel broken and her boilers defective. The Crescent and Proserpine from Bermuda were immediately sent to his assistance, and he reached Nassau, on Monday last. The Hermes will have to remain at the outer anchorage.

Captain H. C. Reynolds, of the Nigel, which is to relieve the Iphigenia in China, has been delayed at Devonport in consequence of a merchant steamer colliding with the cruiser while at anchor in Plymouth Sound last week and causing considerable damage.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, is to leave Portsmouth next Saturday with relief crews for the Australian station.

Captain F. C. M. Noel for the Wallaroo; Captain F. St. G. Rich for the Ringarooma; Commander N. J. Macalister for the Torch; Lieut.-Commander E. M. Hale for the Boomerang; and Lieut.-Commander C. E. Monro and Lieutenant G. E. Nares for the Dart, left Plymouth on Saturday in the Orient steamship Cusco for Australia, to join their respective ships when re-commissioned on that station.

Lieut.-Commander Philip Walter, of the Harrier, arrived at Devonport on Friday in last week to pay off that vessel.

Lieut.-Commander Marcus R. Hill pays off the Hussar at Devonport on Monday next.

Lieutenant R. H. Thom, relieved from the Hood after three and a half years' foreign service, Lieutenant (T.) H. E. Browne, from the Highflyer, and Midshipman R. G. Talbot, invalided from the Renown, arrived on Saturday last on the P. and O. steamship Polawan from the Mediterranean.

Lieutenant Viscount Kelburne, late of the Ramillies, whose serious illness from Malta fever caused anxiety while he was a patient in the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, has greatly improved in health, and attended the recent wedding of an old messmate, Lieutenant H. C. R. Brocklebank, lately paid off from that battleship.

Staff-Commander C. H. R. Robinson, of the Wye, leaves Sheerness on the 8th prox. for Ascension, and is due again at Plymouth on June 3 next.

Deputy Inspector-General H. C. Woods, M.V.O., of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, arrived at Windsor on Friday in last week. He had the honour of dining with Her Majesty on Sunday last.

Major-General C. H. Scafe, R.M.L.I., recently promoted from Commandant of the Plymouth Division, was entertained at dinner on Thursday last week by his successor, Colonel F. Baldwin, and the officers of that division the headquarters mess. It was a memorable day for the gallant general officer, as, in addition to being the guest of the officers who recently served under him, he had the satisfaction of hearing of the relief of Ladysmith, where his son, a Lieutenant 2nd Devon Regiment, had been since the siege commenced.

Major C. H. Kennedy, R.M.L.I., Adjutant 2nd V.B. Scottish Rifles, is advanced to the senior list of his rank by the promotion of Major H. C. Money.

Captain Claude W. Robertson, R.M.L.I., of the Katoomba, port guard ship at Sydney, N.S.W., leaves that colony as captain in the Bushmen's contingent for South Africa.

Lieutenant A. G. Troup, R.M.A., left in the Edgar on Friday week, to join the Royal Oak, instead of Lieutenant H. C. Martin, R.M.L.I., previously selected, to take the place of Lieutenant C. H. Hood, R.M.L.I., ordered to South Africa to serve under Colonel H. L. Smith-Dorrien (Derbyshire Regiment), commanding detachments of local forces in South Natal. Lieutenant Troup was substituted for Lieutenant Martin as there was no officer of the artillery branch serving in the Royal Oak.

Lieutenant W. T. C. Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded at Enslin in November last, and returned to England for treatment, was discharged last week from the Royal Naval Hospital, Haslar.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH."

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widower or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

THE OCCUPATION OF BLOEMFONTEIN.

"BY the help of God and by the bravery of Her Majesty's soldiers the troops under my command have taken possession of Bloemfontein." Thus telegraphed Lord Roberts from Bloemfontein to the Secretary of State for War at 8 p.m. on Tuesday. The British flag then flew over the Presidency, vacated the evening before by Mr. Steyn, late President of the Orange Free State. The Mayor, with the Landdrost and other officials, met the British Commander-in-Chief four miles from the town, and presented him with the keys of the public offices. The enemy had withdrawn from the neighbourhood, and all seemed quiet. The inhabitants of Bloemfontein gave the troops a cordial welcome. When Lord Roberts on Tuesday, at the head of the Gordon Highlanders, a cavalry brigade, and three batteries of horse artillery, took possession of the capital of the Orange State, the first grand objective of the war, he completed half of the heavy task allotted to him. From the very moment that he crossed the enemy's border his advance assumed the character of a triumphal progress, in which he handled a powerful force, mobile beyond precedent in British armies, with a masterly strategy that bore down all opposition. This great event closes a chapter in the records of the campaign, the brilliancy of which has been dulled by no disaster. In rather less than a month Kimberley and Ladysmith have been set free; the Boer general Cronje and his army after heavy fighting captured, and are on the way to St.

Helena; two battles on Free State soil have been fought and won, the enemy scattered in disorganised flight, and the capital occupied. Monday, the 12th inst., saw the British general at Ventersvlei, eighteen miles from Bloemfontein, with General French's cavalry ever well in advance, lying across the southern railway six miles below the town. By midnight of the same day, acting under orders from the Commander-in-Chief, General French had seized a couple of hills overlooking the town and its railway, thus preparing the way for Lord Roberts' triumphal entry on the morrow, and the unfurling there once more of the British flag after a lapse of nearly half a century.

The engagement of the 7th inst. on the Modder near Poplar Grove, if not a great victory, had the important result of demonstrating the practical feebleness and loss of cohesion of the Free State Army. The Boer force was estimated at 14,000 men. Their position was very extended, naturally strong, and entrenched with their usual skill. A frontal attack was expected by them, but Lord Roberts, strong enough to guard against any menace to his own communications, preferred to outflank the position by moving towards the south. This strategy gave him victory without loss, and drove the enemy, always mindful of their line of retreat, into precipitate flight, unable as they confessed, to stand against such a formidable force of well-led cavalry. Ammunition, stores, and two guns were the spoils of the fight, and if few prisoners were captured, the incompleteness of the victory on that score is to be attributed to the fact that nature has set limits for the physical endurance of men and horses. Our cavalry after making a wide detour round the enemy's left flank, were too much exhausted for pursuit. The rout of the Boers was nevertheless complete, for despite the earnest entreaties of Presidents Kruger and Steyn, who were witnesses of their flight, the burghers declined to slacken their speed or attempt a rally. We have learned, however, that retreat, even though it resembles a rout, is but a prudent act of self-preservation in the Boer code of tactics, and by no means proves inability to fight again. Accordingly on Saturday, the 10th inst., the British general, after advancing thirteen miles further to the east, found his way barred by a Boer force entrenched among the kopjes of Driefontein, but so skilfully concealed that opposition from that quarter was unexpected. The British Army at the time was advancing in three columns on a wide front of about sixteen miles. The left or northern column, comprising General Kelly-Kenny's (6th) Division and Colonel Porter's Cavalry Brigade, followed the course of the Modder. General Tucker's (7th Division) on the Southern flank with a cavalry brigade, advanced by the Petrusberg - Bloemfontein road, and formed the right. In the centre, under Lord Roberts' immediate command, were General Colville's (9th) Division, the Brigade of Guards, and Colonel Broadwood's Brigade of Cavalry. Colonel Broadwood, moving some distance in front of the infantry, first came in contact with the enemy at their centre, and became hotly engaged. The Sixth Division, changing its direction towards the south-east came to his support at about 1 o'clock, having marched twenty miles over the burning veldt, and thenceforward for six hours bore the brunt of the fight, which terminated as day fell in a brilliant bayonet charge by the 1st Batt. Welsh Regiment, clearing the main position. The enemy's retirement, which followed, was then converted into a rout by a flank movement of Colonel Broadwood's cavalry, which, passing between the kopjes, got round to the rear of the Boers' position. The 9th Division with the Guards Brigade arrived too late to take part in the action. The excellent practice of the artillery with shrapnel shell in this action caused heavy loss to the enemy. After the engagement the left and central columns united for a further advance. The right column appears to have continued its more southerly course by the Petrusberg-Bloemfontein road.

The actions of Poplar Grove and Driefontein differed essentially as regards the tactics employed by the British General. In the former, while a frontal attack was avoided the infantry being withheld, the enemy's left flank was successfully turned to the south by the British cavalry. The result was an immediate and headlong flight. In the latter, which was apparently an unexpected encounter, the British central column maintaining its course came full upon the Boers' centre holding a group of kopjes arising out of the plain. The result was a prolonged defence, and a determined attack which was only terminated by the British infantry coming to close quarters with the bayonet. This was assisted by a partially successful turning movement by a portion of the cavalry. In both actions the mobility of the Boers enabled them to effect their retreat and carry off most of their guns. From Driefontein by Asvogel Kop to Ventersvlei the British line of advance trended more towards the south, following the course of the Kaal Spruit, and getting rather below the direct road to Bloemfontein. By taking this direction Lord Roberts turned any fresh positions in which the enemy may have entrenched themselves to delay his onward march. The central position now held at Bloemfontein by the main British Army increases the importance of the operations in progress along the Orange River, it being highly desirable to open the railway from the south. This would immensely reduce the difficulty now attending the supply, partly by wagon transport and partly by rail, of 40,000 men so many hundred miles from their base. The Army would then cover directly its line of communications, and become independent of the western railway. With this object in view 2,000 guards were despatched from Bloemfontein southwards by rail on Thursday, and were advancing rapidly without opposition. Of the three columns working northwards through Cape Colony, and which are now in touch with one another, the left under General Clements is at Norval's Pont facing the broken railway bridge; the centre, under General Gatacre, has crossed the Orange River at the Bethulie waggon bridge; and the right, under General Brabant, having seized Aliwal North has driven a Boer force from a position within the Orange State four miles to the north. The strategical line of rail from De Aar to Stormberg is again free, as well as the lines passing from its points of junction to the sea bases at Port Elizabeth and East London. On Monday a portion of Lord Methuen's command occupied Boshof, twenty-five miles due east of Kimberley in the Orange State. A British garrison at this point will both protect the northern flank of Lord Roberts' present line of supply across the veldt and also increase the hold we have already gained on the enemy's territory.

There is nothing noteworthy to record from northern Natal beyond a reconnaissance to Pomeroy on the road to Helpmakaar by Colonel Bethune's Horse, which showed the Boers to be entrenched in force on the Biggarsberg range. To turn their positions, instead of forcing them, either by a movement to the east across the Buffalo River, or by the northerly advance of Lord Roberts' army on the Vaal, should not be impossible. Meanwhile, there is a lull in the activity of Sir Redvers Buller's army, but we shall probably before long hear that he has established communications with the Commander-in-Chief through Van Reenan's Pass and Harismith. This would transfer to the British the great advantage derived from interior lines, hitherto possessed and strikingly utilised by the enemy. The sea has been our only means of inter-communication between the Colonies, and pending the issue of Lord Roberts' advance on Bloemfontein, Sir Charles Warren's Division was held on board the transports in Durban harbour awaiting orders to proceed to Cape Colony. It has since returned under countermanding orders to Sir Redvers Buller's command, in view of a possible renewal of activity in Northern Natal. Mafeking, we write it regretfully, still struggles on against adversity, awaiting relief. Ever resourceful, the garrison have produced a gun which they use with effect, and continue to push out their counter entrenchments. Colonel Plumer, according to the latest news, was, on the 6th inst., at Lobatsi, less than fifty miles to the north, and—if report be true—had succeeded, while drawing off the investing force, in getting a wagon-load of provisions within Colonel Baden-Powell's lines. It has also been reported that a strong mounted force with guns left Kimberley a fortnight ago to cover the 120 miles to Mafeking from the south. The Boers in those quarters are stated to be retiring on Zeerust in the Transvaal. They are now opposed not only by the British, but also by the native chief Linchwe, acting on his own initiative in retaliation for unprovoked incursions and looting in his territory. Rebellion is still rife in the western districts, but its suppression is in the hands of General Settle, a vigorous officer, who may be trusted to lose no time in crushing it. In the eastern districts the rising may be said to have collapsed. Deserted by the Boers who induced them to rise, the rebels are laying down their arms wholesale in indignation and disgust.

THE WAR OFFICE PROGRAMME.

WE have nothing to do with the political aspect of the big national question that Mr. Wyndham dealt with so ably on Monday night when making his statement on the Army Estimates. It is our duty to regard the War Office proposals from the standpoint of practical administration, and viewing the matter in that sense only, we are bound to give the Government credit for having done its best to meet the demand for an increase of available military establishments. Mr. Wyndham was careful to impress upon the House of Commons that the scheme, the details of which were explained with statesmanlike grasp, is an emergency measure, framed with the object of supplying pressing needs, and at the same time testing the capacity of our present system. In these respects the proposals are commendable, showing as they do that the War Office is sensible of its duty to the nation. In past years there has been an unfortunate tendency for officials in Pall Mall to assume an attitude of indignation whenever attempts have been made to question any acts of theirs. "Everything," the arguments have been, in effect, "is for the best in the best of all possible armies: we say so, and that is enough." Mr. Wyndham has reversed this policy. Much, he admits, requires to be done to improve our military position. The War Office is sensible of this, and is anxious to mend matters. What it is doing now it is doing tentatively. The larger reforms which are so urgently needed must come later on, so Mr. Wyndham puts it. The attitude of the War Office has so completely changed that we are disposed to regard the situation hopefully, and doing so are the less willing to hamper those at the helm by questioning the wisdom of certain of their ideas for the development of the system, doubtful though the success of those measures may seem to be. If Parliament accepts the proposal now submitted in the spirit in which it was offered, i.e., as a pledge that the department is sensible of its duty, and will not seek to shirk responsibility later, all may come well. The present is scarcely a time, as Mr. Wyndham has properly explained, to launch new systems. General improvement can only come when the war in which we are engaged has been brought to a conclusion, and we are able, with the experiences of the campaign to guide us, in putting our fingers on those weak features of organisation and routine, armament and equipment, which have been brought to light during the progress of operations.

We at the present moment may be said to be taking stock of our Army. For a period of close on half a century no opportunity has been afforded us of testing our system on a large scale. There may be much in it that is bad. We are among those who believe that there is, but it would be absurd to expect any department to say offhand what is worth keeping and what is not. It will be for the Generals in active command at the front to decide questions of this kind, when having ended their labours, they have time to formulate their reports, drawing their deductions from what they have seen of the working of existing methods whilst actually engaged in the business of war. There is nothing easier than to sit at home and discuss the operations of a campaign in an arm-chair with perhaps the scantiest of telegrams to influence one's judgment. There are a hundred small details of which the General in command has to take account before he feels himself justified in moving from his base, and it is the presence or absence of these very details which proves the perfection of system or the reverse. Who of all the many critics of the War Office is in a position to determine the extent of failure or measure of success of our administrative system from practical knowledge in the present war? The Generals are still at the front. They only can know by actual experience where the system is at fault, and until they are with us again, to tell their own tale, it would be the height of folly for the responsible heads of the War Office to embark on any heroic plan of reform. By doing so they would possibly put the whole system out of gear, and thus hamper the very men who it is their duty to support in every possible way. Holding these opinions, as we do strongly, we trust that good sense will prevail, and that the policy of the Government will meet with support, that policy being to delay the larger scheme of improvement until such time as the Generals now conducting operations in South Africa have returned home and are able to assist with their counsel and advice.

The Government, be it remembered, is not altogether idle. Already it has taken steps to raise four new Cavalry regiments, seven batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, thirty-six field batteries, and twelve Howitzer batteries, 2,038 of all ranks for the establishment of the Royal Engineers, twelve line battalions, 2,220 (twenty-nine companies) for the Army Service Corps, 450 (eight companies) for the Army Ordnance Corps, not to mention the Royal Reserve Battalions. This marks a considerable advance in our available forces. The men required for all these additional units may not be forthcoming, but a vigorous attempt is to be made to obtain them. It is something surely for the nation to know that those in legislative authority are showing themselves anxious to meet their wishes, which have been expressed with no uncertain voice. Prior to 1898 there was no disposition on the part of the War Office even to admit that the Army was unequal to the needs of the Empire, though every soldier and every thinking taxpayer knew that to be the case. Successive War Ministers were satisfied to see the nation living from hand to mouth, submitting to the will of those whose aim it has been to make popular Budgets the be-all and end-all of their political existence. The war in South Africa came to demonstrate the folly of such pettifogging "statesmanship," and the War Office has been only too ready to take action, once its hands have been freed. It ought not, however, to be hampered by frivolous censure now, when it is moving in the direction which public opinion approves. It is to be regretted, of course, that action was not taken earlier than 1898, but the blame for the mistakes of the past must rest on the shoulders of those who failed to realise the extent of our weakness, now rendered so apparent as to be beyond all question. Matters have turned out just as the much abused critics predicted they would should our system be submitted to any considerable pressure. The action of the critics has been more than justified, but the same critics should at least be generous now, and not retard progress by ill-considered condemnation of those who are doing their best to render our Army more efficient for the purposes for which it is maintained.

Army Notes.

The Ameer's latest pronouncement, unlike the speeches of most Oriental rulers, is something more than commonplace wrapped up in fine phrases; it goes to the very heart of the Central Asian question. His manner of laying bare the weak spot of the Russian Empire will hardly please the Foreign Office at St. Petersburg, which realises it only too well. It is, in truth, the skeleton at the Russian diplomatic feast, and, though never forgotten, is kept securely in the diplomatic closet. The shadow of Nadir Shah, and the Tartar princes, who held Muscovy in fief for centuries, is not likely to lift in presence of Mohamedan dislike of Russia and the growing restlessness of the Moslem world. The Ameer sees it as clearly as the Ministers of the Czar, and calmly defies the Muscovite to do his worst, apparently confident that neither India nor Afghanistan will suffer. This is striking, and with all his laboured efforts to prove his loyalty, which he says is twenty years old and unbroken. no doubt he is "willing" to send 50,000 troops to South Africa, but, as he admits that the difficulties in the way are insuperable, one sadly fears he spoke for effect. The assertion that he is always willing to fight for England on land, hardly tallies with facts. In the late Tirah campaign, when his assistance would have been of the utmost value, he stood aloof, and it was more than suspected that he inclined to the enemy instead of to us. It is curious, to say the least of it, that when his aid was required it was not forthcoming; when it is not required, he calls heaven and earth to witness how anxious he is to give it. The truth is, the Ameer will never be a staunch ally unless he is threatened by a Power which will destroy the independence of Afghanistan. On the frontier of India he will never be reliable, as we have proved to our cost over and over again. This will, perhaps, not matter greatly if we are certain of his policy in Central Asia. That it will be in harmony with our Indian policy is more than probable, not because he loves this country, but because his interest demands it.

The arming of the native regiments in India with the Lee-Enfield rifle is a new departure, which will be watched with interest. In the late frontier campaign the Goorkhas were armed with the Lee-Metford rifle; but their case was exceptional. Up to the issue of the Viceroy's new order, it was an axiom of our Indian policy to arm the English soldier with a weapon superior to that with which the Indian troops are armed. Apparently the loyalty of Sikh, Goorkha, Pathan, and Hindoo, is regarded as so completely proved that they are now to be armed as well as the regulars from this country. Another axiom of the policy, handed down to us from the troubled times of the Indian Mutiny, was the necessity for mixed native regiments. This has long been neglected, so that many corps entirely consist of troops belonging to the same caste. At the present moment too, a rule, which has hitherto been strictly observed, is being broken. The British soldiers do not outnumber the native soldiers two to one, for even before the outbreak of the South African War the Army in India was below its usual strength. There is, however, no cause for alarm in the gradual abandonment of a policy which was brought into existence to meet special circumstances. It must be remembered that, with the railway and telegraph all over the country, the suppression of a native revolt would be a simple matter compared to what it was in 1856. Moreover, the white population has largely increased, and white volunteers of excellent fighting quality are always on the spot. If they can be of service in South Africa they can in time of danger be of service in India. Not that it would be wise to allow the British Army in India to fall below a certain standard. But it is possible to do it on occasion without disastrous consequences.

There is much to be said in favour of the views of the "military critic" of the St. James's Gazette, who, in an article on "Permanent Army Reform," has suggested that any permanent reorganisation of our forces should specially aim at increasing the proportion of cavalry and artillery. And we are quite in accord with the writer when he urges upon the Government of India the importance of reconsidering the constitution of its present European garrison in the direction of an increase in mobile troops. There is no disputing the importance of mobility in a field force. It has been demonstrated clearly in South Africa that the advantages to be gained by the possession of mounted men is enormous. It is a fact that we have endeavoured for years past to press on our War Office, but without effect. As cavalry and artillery officers know to their cost, the policy of Pall Mall has been more or less antagonistic to their arms. Cavalrymen have been conspicuous by their absence at headquarters, and as to the artillery, the recent abolition of the office of Deputy Adjutant General, Royal Artillery, and the break-up of the Royal Regiment of Artillery may be accepted as convincing evidence of the want of foresight of those in authority, to say nothing of the ill-advised conversion, a few years ago, of a number of batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, which was carried out in opposition to the advice of every cavalry and artillery officer who was qualified to express an opinion. We have seen in the cases of Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre how powerless infantry generals are in face of modern guns and firearms when called upon to operate in the field with forces of "foot soldiers" only. The mounted arms, as the writer in the St. James's Gazette says truly, are always popular, and if the Government of India could be induced to institute an inquiry, it would find, we believe, that in the long run it would benefit greatly by augmenting the mounted arms and reducing the establishment of infantry. It has to be remembered that in case of emergency infantry could be brought on to the scene of operations with far greater ease than cavalry and artillery, and a reduction of the infantry would enable the home authorities to perfect considerably their arrangements for the despatch of a army corps or two if necessary. In adopting this proposal the Indian Government would be following out the ideas of a distinguished officer, whose name will ever hold a foremost place in the annals of Indian administration, General Sir George Chesney, whose paper, just reproduced in the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution, may be regarded as a monument to the genius of the writer. As Sir George Chesney shows, in the wars of the future, success will be assured to that army which can reckon on mobility as the first essential to field efficiency. It is a lesson which the Boers would seem to have taken thoroughly to heart. To our failure to grasp this first principle of modern warfare our reverses in the early stages of our present campaign in South Africa may be said to be wholly due. This being the case, it is to be hoped that those directly responsible for the defence of our Indian possessions will not show any disposition to regard lightly a question of vital importance, upon the early consideration of which so much may depend, should difficulties arise on the frontier. The carrying out of the idea might be found on full inquiries to be impossible, but it ought not to be dismissed as impracticable until fully discussed, for to practical soldiers it cannot fail to present many solid features of common sense.

A telegram from India announces that the Secretary of State will shortly sanction an increase in the Indian Staff of ninety-two officers. The Pioneer, of Allahabad, hopes this will be only the first instalment. Presumably most of the vacancies thus to be created will be filled by transfers from regiments on the Indian Establishment. In any case the augmentation would represent an addition of nearly a hundred to the number of candidates for commissions in the Regular Army, and this at a time when the military authorities are already brought face to face with a difficulty of no small moment. Unfortunately the ways of the Education Department have not always been marked by that foresight which is so necessary in an Army officered as ours is by the middle and higher classes. There has been a great improvement of recent years, it is true, since Colonel Delavoye assumed the direction, but it is not quite easy to all at once adopt a common-sense policy. That, however, will have to come. For the moment we have to deal with the augmentation of the Indian Staff Corps. It is not necessary for us to say how cordially we approve that step which we have advocated for years. Lord Roberts has always held that the native regiments are seriously under-officered; but it has been left for the Boer War to establish that fact beyond dispute. The addition of ninety-two officers to the Indian establishment is a most wise step. But the Pioneer is perfectly right in expressing a hope that it will only be a first instalment. Our respected contemporary might even have gone further and predicted that this would be the case, for after what we have seen recently in South Africa, it would be folly to send native regiments into action with the small number of officers they now possess. But unfortunately there has been as yet no proper settlement of the difficult problem of how to create a reserve of officers for the Indian Army. Various schemes have been submitted, it is true. Have any of them been of a sufficiently practical character to ensure adoption? We believe not.

Steps have at length been taken to deal with the cases of some of the officers who are removed from duty with their regiments by reason of their being prisoners of war. The first officers of senior rank to fall into the hands of the enemy were Lieut.-Colonel B. D. Möller and Major A. F. Greville, and Captain and Adjutant W. M. P. Pollok, and Vet.-Lieutenant F. H. Shore, 18th Hussars; Lieutenant B. J. Medjendie 1st Batn. King's Royal Rifles; and Captain M. P. Lonsdale, and Lieutenants F. A. L. Mesurier, C. Garvice, and C. T. W. Grimshaw, 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, after Sir Penn Symons' action at Talana Hill on Oct. 20 last. The disaster of Nicholson's Nek—in which Lieutenant-Colonel F. R. C. Carleton, Majors F. H. Munn and C. Skincaird, three Captains, and ten Subalterns of the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers; and Majors S. Humphery, H. Capel Cure, and W. R. P. Wallan, two Captains and several Subalterns of the 1st Batn. Gloucestershire Regiment were captured—occurred ten days later. Since then—for four months—the War Office would seem to have been wondering what was best to be done in order to make up the loss so far as the units immediately affected were concerned. It has been decided, and rightly so, to second those who, for no fault of their own, are unable for the moment to render effective service with their regiments and battalions. In the case of the 18th Hussars, Major E. C. Knox, the second in command, is given the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, he having been in responsible command of the regiment in Ladysmith since the date of his superior's capture; two subalterns, Lieutenants C. H. Leveson and E. C. Haag, have been at the same time promoted to troops in succession to Lieut.-Colonel Möller and Major Greville, the latter also being a prisoner. In the Gloucestershire Regiment, Major C. J. Vines, second in command of the 2nd Batn., is promoted a temporary Lieutenant-Colonel, as there is a difficulty, of course, in giving substantive promotion to Major Humphery, who, in ordinary circumstances, would have succeeded Colonel Welford, killed in action, in command of the 1st Batn., whilst Lieutenant H. E. Platt becomes a Captain in succession to Major W. R. P. Wallace, a prisoner of war; and Lieutenants F. Burges and C. N. Hunter, vice Captains S. Duncan and R. Conner, also absent from the same cause. In the Royal Irish Fusiliers Major C. R. Rogers, second in command of the 2nd Batn., is given the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel to command the 1st Batn., vice Lieut.-Colonel Carleton, Lieutenant C. Conyers being made a Captain in succession, and Lieutenant M. Wilson in succession to Captain A. R. Burrowes, likewise a prisoner of war. In the same way Lieutenant the Marquis of Tullibardine, D.S.O., gets his troop in the Royal Horse Guards, vice Captain W. F. Ricardo, "missing." In the Devonshire Regiment Major H. Batson is accorded the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and Lieutenant M. H. Grant obtains his company by reason of Lieut.-Colonel Bullock having become a prisoner of war. In the West Yorkshire Regiment Captain C. Mansel-Jones is brought into the establishment from the seconded list in succession to Major H. T. de C. Hobbs, a prisoner of war. In the Lancashire Fusiliers Major C. D. Wallington, 1st Batn., now a second in command, is made a temporary Lieutenant-Colonel to command the 2nd Batn., vice Lieut.-Colonel C. J. Blomfield, D.S.O., a prisoner of war. In the Royal Irish Rifles Major F. J. Tobin is accorded the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel—Major H. J. Seton, second in command, is also a prisoner at Pretoria—to command his battalion, vice Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Eagar, who has died of his wounds.

It is satisfactory to find that a matter of some importance affecting the interests of units in the field has thus been settled, but all these promotions are dated February 24. Now, surely it was due to the officers promoted that their rank should have been given from the day following that upon which the vacancies occurred. Excuses may fairly be made for the military authorities, as it has been so unusual of recent years for British officers to fall into the hands of the enemy. In the circumstances it is reasonable to suppose that they did not know exactly what the best course of procedure was to be adopted in order to meet the claims of those who were left in rather invidious positions, performing higher duties but with no recognised status. Officers brought from other battalions may have no grounds of complaint, but with Lieut.-Colonels Knox, 18th Hussars and Batson, 2nd Batn. Devonshire Regiment, it is different. The duties and responsibilities of command devolved upon them from the date upon which their seniors became prisoners of war, and their rank should therefore have been antedated, for it is distinctly wrong that they should suffer by reason of the fact that no provision had been made for possible contingencies. The command of a regiment or battalion on active service is a very weighty responsibility. The work and anxieties of Lieut.-Colonel Knox for instance, at the head of a cavalry regiment during a siege, must have been enormous. Yet for four months whilst the authorities were making up their minds he has laboured in Ladysmith as a Major second in command, and when at last measures are adopted to recognise his claims to higher rank and status, all his services, during these four months, are ignored, for no other reason seemingly than that Treasury officials could not be induced, notwithstanding all evidences of the failure of their methods, to act graciously. As matters stand the settlement of a difficult question cannot be said to be all that could be desired. Doubtless the War Office has been only too ready to obtain the authority of the Treasury to do something; but so far as some few of those are concerned who are now actually in command, we do not think the arrangements made are of a nature to produce satisfaction, giving evidence as they do of that spirit of cheeseparing which is unfortunately a feature of all Treasury proceedings.

At the present time the foreign military papers form an interesting subject of study. Most of them have been so busily chronicling our reverses and foretelling disaster to our arms that it is curious to observe how they receive the news of our successes. The Militär-Wochenblatt cheerfully recognises that at last the tide has turned. It thought Cronje had an efficient intelligent service, and that he knew what we were about, and is completely surprised at his inability to anticipate Lord Roberts's strategy, and at the extreme carelessness which led him to disaster. So far as we are concerned, the Wochenblatt remarks that the new development was prepared with the utmost secrecy, and it ventures to assert that even the officers engaged did not know exactly what was going forward. Cronje is praised for the celerity of his movements, but the Wochenblatt is of the opinion that General French moved too rapidly, and that the relief of Kimberley might have followed the entrapping of Cronje before he escaped into the Free State. An Austrian officer—Count Adelbert Sternberg—who was with the Boers at Magersfontein, and was present when General French's flank movement began, confirms in the Neue Freie Presse all that the Wochenblatt says as to the blindness of the Boers, who laughed at the very idea of any flank march being made by us.

The German semi-official organ discusses the matter dispassionately and from a reasonable point of view, but the same can scarcely be said of the Deutsche Heeres Zeitung. It seems to us rather pitiable to witness the grudging spirit in which this organ admits our successes. On March 3 it presented to its readers a picture of the tide of Boer invasion in Cape Colony which was about to sweep us beyond the great Karoo. The condition at Colesberg was painted in dark colours, and Lord Roberts's communications were seriously menaced, with the result that his operations on the Western side would be greatly influenced. General MacDonald's expedition to Koodoosberg had been "unfortunate," and altogether our position was most unsatisfactory. But, before the Heeres-Zeitung had finished its article, it received some intelligence as to the occupation of Jacobsdal and the relief of Kimberley, and, seizing upon a number of points, threw doubt upon the accuracy of the intelligence and the success of the operation, for it expected Lord Roberts to meet with such reverses as it has recorded earlier on. When, therefore, complete intelligence arrived as to our success, the Heeres-Zeitung explained its attitude by an allusion to our monopoly of the cables which made all our reports untrustworthy. But, again, before completing its article, the Berlin organ was driven unwillingly to admit our success, and it has the bad taste to sneer at Lord Roberts's telegram announcing the capitulation of Cronje.

The French papers have not very much to say, but like the German organs are completely taken by surprise. The Belgique Militaire, which has always discussed the war rationally—if from an anti-English point of view—now frankly confesses that we have done well, and that the ability with which Lord Roberts has conducted his operations is worthy of all praise. In relation to the relief of Kimberley, our contemporary hazards a similar remark to that made by the Militär-Wochenblatt. The Belgique Militaire proceeds to criticise Cronje harshly for having allowed himself to be surprised, and for having been so foolish as not to foresee that larger developments were pending than those which had been possible to Lord Methuen. Cronje might have escaped if he had abandoned his convoy, but could he have abandoned it? Would his men, on whose personal goodwill all depends, since they have no proper military organisation, have consented to abandon their wives and children? The fact is, as the Belgique Militaire remarks, that Cronje had really sacrificed his liberty of movement by persisting in his attack upon Kimberley. Two legends, the Brussels organ concludes, have been destroyed by the fate of Cronje. It can no longer be said that the Boers were informed as to our movements and even our intentions, and it is remarkable that they have always been surprised more or less completely by strategic operations on a large scale. The other legend is in regard to Boer mobility. This advantage is theirs as mounted infantry on the field of battle, or for operations of restricted character, but it vanishes entirely when movements are extended over a large area, or a considerable period of time. This at least is the view of the Belgique Militaire, which bases its argument upon the huge train of vehicles which accompanies a Boer commando. A correspondent of the Nieuw Rotterdamse Courant, who was secretary to the Field Cornet in the march upon Mafeking at the opening of hostilities, states that a force of 181 men to which he belonged had twenty-four waggons with from six to twelve oxen each, or one vehicle to every seven or eight men, and our contemporary remarks that an army can neither go far nor quickly which has such a clog tied to its leg.

Among the deaths reported from Ladysmith on March 9, was that of 5631 Sergeant P. Brind, 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders. Sergeant Brind was a son of the late General Sir James Brind, V.C., R.A., who commanded the siege train at Delhi. Not being able to obtain a commission in the ordinary way, young Brind joined the ranks. A Commanding Officer writes to us anent Sergeant Brind's case:—"I have in my regiment two sergeants, both sons of old and distinguished officers, whom I have recommended for commissions; but, alas, my battalion is embarking on active service, and these two young men are going out as non-commissioned officers whilst youngsters from everywhere are being brought in as 2nd Lieutenants. It is almost impossible to find words sufficiently strong to condemn such a system. I trust the service members will keep the matter in view, for it cannot be for the good of the Army for the feeling to get abroad that sons of old officers have no prospect of promotion through the ranks." We quite agree with this view. Letters are continually reaching us from officers pointing out the desirability of giving promotion to qualified non-commissioned officers.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, always ready to do anything to assist the cause of naval and military charities, has made an appeal on behalf of the "Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society," of which she is president. The society is now in process of organisation. Princess Christian took up the question of the provision of Homes for the nation's defenders before the present war broke out. Since then the necessity for some such organisation has been much emphasised. Lord Pirbright has presented a site of eight acres of freehold land at Bisley, a sum of £7,174 has been subscribed by the public for the erection of the Homes, and the Allied Building Trades of Great Britain have, with splendid generosity, given six Homes, fully equipped, including a house for the superintendent, recreation-room, workshops, infirmary, and electric-light plant, the money value being £25,000, as a gift to the nation and a memorial of the present war. These facts afford, as the Princess points out, most convincing proof that the public recognise the necessity of providing permanent Homes for the soldiers and sailors who have been disabled in their country's cause. When the Homes are completed they will provide accommodation for at least 230 men, and it is estimated that the annual cost of maintenance will not be less than about £3,000, representing a capital sum of £100,000. The "Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society" is directed to a want only partially supplied by existing Institutions. It is intended, by means of this organisation, to do for soldiers and sailors what some foundations do for their widows and children. Princess Christian's Society will take in hand the soldier or seaman himself and endeavour to establish him in life, and prevent him from becoming a burden on the public. It will be part of the scheme to endeavour to find suitable employment for him when he leaves the Home; and in doing so it will render a most valuable service, both to the Army, the Navy, and the public. The scheme deserves all support, and we should be glad to see the Government leading the way when the war is over with a donation of £250,000 to the funds of the Society. If it could see its way to do that in recognition of the gallantry of those who have fought during the campaign, it would be an indiscreet to the charitable to assist in a national movement.

The War Office has warned all Militia units which have not already been called up, that they will be embodied on or about May 1, for three months. The assembly of all units simultaneously will afford the military authorities an opportunity of taking stock of the force, and too much care cannot be exercised during the period of its general embodiment to ascertain what changes are desirable in order to increase its popularity. It is a subject which cannot be allowed to stand over. There is no doubt that the exercise of even a modicum of common sense would do much to improve the condition of the Service. Its value is proved by the manner in which it has come through the ordeal of official neglect. The treatment the Militia has received in the last thirty years has been disgraceful from every point of view. Now, however, that the Service members have taken its case in hand, there is a prospect, perhaps, of its being regarded seriously. No longer will it be permissible for high officials to say "It is only the Militia. Anything is good enough for that." The indignation of the public has been aroused against the systematic disregard of this valuable reserve, and it will go badly with any administration in future, we are glad to think, which fails to keep Militia regiments up to their full establishment both of officers and men.

The efficacy of the Colt gun is being demonstrated in a practical way from the front in South Africa, the company having received orders to supply at once two guns and galloping carriages to the Cavalry Brigade, three guns and carriages to the Bushmen Contingent, and guns and carriages to the West Australian and New South Wales contingents. Sir F. Carrington also has taken out a battery with him. It is a matter for surprise that the War Office authorities have not long ago sent out a consignment to the troops in South Africa.

Complaints are made that the Boers fire upon our ambulance parties. Is it not possible, however, that sometimes this is done by accident? Our own stupidity may account for some cases, for it is impossible to conceive of anything more characteristic of the stupidity of red tape than the putting the ambulance men and Medical Corps into the same uniform as the combatant forces. Khaki is admirably suited to the latter;

but surely the object of the uniform of the men under the Red Cross should be to make them as conspicuous as possible. The red cross on the sleeves of the men cannot be seen at any distance. Some more sensible uniform might be found for the hospital attendants than khaki.

The decision with regard to the wearing of the shamrock by Irish soldiers will put an end to a long-standing cause of friction. No one will grudge the favour, for Ireland has borne her full share in the present war. Ireland has furnished two Cavalry regiments—the 5th Lancers and the 6th Dragoons—and a third, the 8th Hussars, left England recently with the 4th Brigade. The eight Irish Infantry regiments have furnished no fewer than nine battalions for the fighting force as follows:—1st Batn. Royal Irish, 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, 1st and 2nd Batns. Royal Irish Fusiliers, 1st Batn. Connaught Rangers, 1st Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, and 1st and 2nd Batns. Royal Dublin Fusiliers. And there will soon be another Irish battalion at the front—the 1st Leinster—for South Africa from Halifax. The remaining six battalions are in India, with the exception of the 2nd Batn. Leinster, which is at Barbados.

Now that Reorganisation is likely, attention may well be called to the useless hampering of officers commanding regiments of the Guards with unwieldy brigades of infantry Volunteers, the result being that the brigadiers have not the time to give proper attention to the Volunteers, while the latter suffer for that lack of supervision which they require. The Guards Brigadiers are rarely seen at the parades, or rifle ranges, or orderly rooms of the Volunteer battalions, except at their Easter (or Aldershot) training and at the annual inspection; and brigade or half-brigade drills and field days, though annually put in orders, are, as a rule, cancelled. The remedy is at hand—viz., to place the brigades, of not more than four battalions apiece, under ex-Colonels of the Guards on their promotion to Major-General, and let these report direct to the General Officer Commanding the Home District. To mention only Major-Generals, J. B. Sterling, Lord Falmouth, and the Hon. F. H. Eaton will prove what excellent men are ready to hand, and the money would indeed be well spent. A Volunteer Brigade-Major and the requisitioning of the most central headquarters as brigade headquarters, where commanding officers could see the Brigadier at suitable hours to them, would pretty well complete details. There would be thus more constant supervision and more intimate connection between the Brigadier and his battalions, to the great benefit of a large fraction of the Volunteer Force. The present arrangement is just about as bad as any arrangement could be.

The establishment of Royal Army Medical Corps messes in India, to which a Government grant of 100 rupees and 80 rupees per mensem respectively, where ten or eight officers form the mess, is recorded with satisfaction, and thus a long-standing grievance is removed.

A correspondent writes: "Sir,—Are the mules that bolted at Nicholson's Nek the real saviours of Ladysmith? In other words, would the provisions have held out with over 1,000 additional mouths to fill? Or would Sir G. White have been able in that case to operate so effectually on the enemy's rear as to have converted defeat into victory at Colenso or Spion Kop? I doubt; but what says military opinion?"

Messrs. Richard Dickeson and Co., of Dover, have opened a branch establishment in Highbury Street, Portsmouth.

An Army Order just issued directs that, when it is necessary in any exceptional case concerning the separation allowance to verify the marriage of a soldier or the birth of any of his children, the cost of the certificate shall be charged against the public.

The Prince of Wales will hold a Levée on Her Majesty's behalf at St. James's Palace on Monday, April 2.

The Duke of Cambridge arrived at Cannes on Tuesday evening, accompanied by Colonel Fitz-George.

Lady Audrey Buller and Lady White were among the Queen's guests at Windsor Castle on Monday night, and remained at the Palace.

General Sir William Lockhart has been taking a sea trip after his recent serious illness, and was to have returned to Calcutta yesterday. He will proceed to Simla if the improvement in his health is confirmed.

General Sir Arthur J. Lyon-Fremantle and Lieut.-Colonel A. T. Sloggett, R.A.M.C., has been appointed with her Majesty's sanction Knights of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in England.

In a paragraph the week before last, under the heading of "Regimental Intelligence," mention was made of "General A. Lyttleton" in connection with the satisfactory progress of Captain Sharp, who was wounded at Ladysmith, and several correspondents have called our attention to an error in it, which we are happy to correct. There is no "General A. Lyttleton" in the Service. There are thirteen Annesleys in the Army List, none of General's rank. There is only one "Lyttleton-Annesley," and that officer, Lieut.-General Arthur Lyttleton-Annesley, is Colonel of the "12th Prince of Wales's Royal Lancers," practically shelved, although he is known to be one of the most intelligent, zealous, and accomplished officers in the Service. He was retired under one of those Procrustean rules which inflict injury upon the Army and are unjust to the individual; in similar cases we see a Cavalry officer, of whom there are not many of equal experience, none of greater, with long and varied service, especially in India, without a letter to his name, condemned for the rest of his life, apparently to professional inactivity, and wonder!

Lieut.-General Sir F. Carrington leaves Southampton to-day in the Aurania, to take up his command of the Rhodesian Field Force. Among those who accompany him are Colonel G. J. C. Whittington, A.P.D.; Majors G. A. L. Carew, D.S.O., 7th Hussars; C. D. Learoyd, R.E.; A. V. Jenner, D.S.O., Rifle Brigade, and C. L. Josling, R.A.M.C.; Captains W. E. Lawrence, South Wales Borderers; E. Peach, F.S.C.; R. G. Partidge, A.O.D.; and 2nd Lieutenants C. S. Rome, 11th Hussars, and C. H. Dillon, Rifle Brigade.

Major-General W. Thackwell, C.B., has handed over the command of the Lancashire Volunteer Infantry Brigade. In a farewell order he stated that during the eleven years of his command over 40,000 men had been in camp, and during that long time not a single instance of misbehaviour had been brought to his notice, the discipline of the brigade being as perfect as discipline could be.

Major-General A. G. Wauchope, of Niddrie Marischall, Midlothian, who was killed in action at Magersfontein on December 11 last, aged 53 years, left personal estate in England and Scotland valued at £82,742 6s. 6d.

Major-General Sir Reginald Wingate—for Sir Reginald has been given local rank in Egypt by virtue of his appointment as Sirdar—is made a K.C.B. Colonel D. F. Lewis, C.B., is appointed A.D.C. to the Queen, Majors and Brevet Lieut.-Colonels B. T. Mahon, D.S.O., 8th Hussars, and St. G. C. Henry, Northumberland Fusiliers, and Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Colonel T. E. Hickman, D.S.O., Worcestershire Regiment, are promoted Brevet Colonels, Major F. J. Maxse, Coldstream Guards, and Brevet Majors W. R. Doran, Royal Irish Regiment, and G. F. Gorrington, Royal Engineers, Brevet Lieut.-Colonels and Captain F. J. L. Howard, A.S.C., a Brevet-Major in recognition of their services in connection with the pursuit and the defeat of the Khalifa in November last; while Lieutenant A. R. Hoskins, North Staffordshire Regiment, is noted for a brevet-majority in due course. It will be allowed that these rewards have been well earned for the services rendered by the officers were of a very valuable nature. Sir Reginald Wingate finds himself a K.C.B. at the early age of thirty-eight, Colonel Lewis is forty-five, Colonel Mahon is thirty-seven, Colonel Henry thirty-nine, Colonel Hickman forty, Lieut.-Colonel Maxse thirty-seven, Lieut.-Colonel Doran thirty-eight, and Lieut.-Colonel Gorrington thirty-two.

Major-General J. E. Boyes and staff of the 17th Brigade—Captain A. Foster, 1st Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, A.D.C., and Captain C. B. FitzHenry, 7th Hussars, Brigade Major—left Southampton yesterday for South Africa.

Colonel F. C. Burton, A.A.G., Rawul Pindi, comes home on six months' leave.

Colonel G. E. Money, Central India Horse, has been confirmed as A.A.G., Presidency District.

Two colonels on the half-pay list have retired voluntarily without waiting for employment—viz., Colonels F. S. Allen, late 2nd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, and J. D. Fetherstonhaugh, late 2nd Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. Colonel Fetherstonhaugh had been on half-pay since July 23, 1898, and Colonel Allen since Dec. 11 last.

Colonel C. F. A. Turnbull, 1st Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, has arrived home from India to take over command of the 32nd Regimental District at Bodmin, which became vacant some time ago by the appointment of Colonel E. C. Knox to the command of the 13th Infantry Brigade in South Africa.

Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. North Lancashire Regiment, has left Kimberley quietly for the Coast to recruit his health after the strain of the recent siege.

Colonel H. Comerford, R.A.M.C., P.M.O., Dover, who was under orders to exchange duties with Colonel C. A. Maunsell, at Bombay, will probably remain in England instead of taking up duties in India.

Lieut.-Colonel C. Wood, just promoted to the command of the 1st Batn. Essex Regiment, was the oldest Major on full pay, and was fourteen years a regimental Major. He passed for direct commission by purchase in 1870, was a student at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in 1871, was in the West Essex Militia in 1872, joined the 73rd Regiment in 1872, was transferred to the 56th Regiment in 1875, became Captain in the 1st Batn. Essex Regiment in 1882, Major 1886, Adjutant (4th Batn.) in 1887, and now Lieut.-Colonel 1st Essex in 1900. This is almost a record in these days of slow promotion.

Lieut.-Colonel A. Masters, 2nd Central India Horse, is granted an extension of command until February 15, 1901.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel W. S. Sparkes, Welsh Regiment, has taken up the duties of our Assistant Adjutant General, Egyptian Army, on appointment. Major O. H. Pedley, Connaught Rangers, is also appointed an Assistant Adjutant General.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel H. H. Burney, Gordon Highlanders, has vacated his appointment on the staff of the Royal Military College of Canada, and proceeds to South Africa to take up the appointment of second in command to a battalion of his regiment in the field.

Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel H. W. Jackson, late Gordon Highlanders, Governor of Berber, has taken up the duties of Civil Secretary to the Government of the Soudan. He was to have been succeeded at Berber by Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel F. J. Nason, D.S.O., Scottish Rifles, but the death of Major S. P. Strong in action in Natal has recalled Colonel Nason to regimental duty as second in command of the 2nd Batn.

Among officers struck off the strength of the Egyptian Army on proceeding on active service to South Africa were Brevet-Lieut.-Colonels P. W. J. Le Gallais and B. T. Mahon, D.S.O., 8th Hussars; Brevet-Major H. G. Fitton, D.S.O., Royal Berkshire Regiment; Captains R. N. Gamble, Lincolnshire Regiment, and G. A. T. Bray, R.A.M.C.; and Lieutenants T. Conolly, Royal Scots Greys; A. G. Stevenson, and E. O. A. Newcombe, R.E.

In Major C. R. Day, 1st Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry, who was dangerously wounded at Paardeberg on the 18th ult., and has since died of his wounds, the Army has lost an officer of great ability. When in India he devoted himself to a study of Indian music, the result of his labours being a handsome volume, illustrated by Mr. William Gibb (Novello and Co.). It was he who prepared the catalogue of the wind instruments shown in the Military Exhibition at Chelsea. Major Day was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, a member of the Duke of Edinburgh's Committee of the Vienna Exhibition, 1892, and of the Committee of Advice to the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition this year. He seemed destined to make an ideal commandant at Kneller Hall, for which position he certainly had done everything to qualify himself.

Majors E. J. Tickell, D.S.O., 14th Hussars, G. Wright, R.G.A., A. Paris, R.M.A.; Brevet Major P. Moir-Byres, and Captains J. Ponsonby and C. E. Pereira, Coldstream Guards, R. A. Arbuthnot, Royal Irish Regiment, H. J. Madocks, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and C. W. Kennard, 3rd Batt. Gordon Highlanders, have been selected for special service under Sir Frederick Carrington in South Africa.

Brevet-Major J. J. Asser, Dorsetshire Regiment, attached to the Egyptian Army has been appointed A.A.G. Omdurman West; and Captain P. R. Phipps, Dorsetshire Regiment, D.A.A.G.; and Captain E. L. Herbert, Black Watch, Staff Captain at the same station.

Captain P. G. Elgood, Devonshire Regiment, has succeeded Brevet-Major O. H. Pealey, Bedfordshire Regiment, as Commandant at Assuan.

Captains K. Chesney, 18th Bengal Lancers; H. C. Ricketts, 15th Bengal Lancers; and C. E. Macquoid, Hyderabad Contingent, have been selected to accompany 2,000 water carriers from India to the Cape.

An Edinburgh telegram states that, although only a few days have elapsed since the proposal to institute a fund for the purpose of providing a golfers' memorial to the late Lieutenant F. G. Tait, of the Black Watch, the golf champion, killed at Koodoosberg on Feb. 7, the necessary money has already been raised for the equipment of a bed in the Scottish South African base hospital. The surplus funds will be devoted to a permanent hospital.

SOUTH AFRICAN DESPATCHES.

The despatches of Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre, dealing with the events of December 10 and 11—the actions of Magersfontein and Stormberg—to the non-publication of which we referred last week, were issued yesterday evening. Lord Methuen writes from Modder River under date February 15, his original dispatch having miscarried.

His lordship's account of the disaster to the Highland Brigade is this.—The night march was ordered for 12.30 a.m., the bearings and distance having been ascertained at great personal risk by Major Benson, R.A., D.A.A.G. The distance was 2½ miles, and daybreak was due at 3.25 a.m. The Brigade was led with perfect accuracy to the point of assault by Major Benson.

Before moving off, Major-Gen. Wauchope explained all he intended to do and the particular part each battalion of his Brigade was to play in the scheme.

The Brigade was to march in mass of quarter columns, the four battalions keeping touch, and if necessary ropes were to be used for the left guides; these ropes were taken, but I believed used by only two battalions.

The three battalions were to extend just before daybreak, two companies in firing line, to companies in support, and four companies in reserve, all at five paces interval between them.

What happened was as follows:—Not finding any signs of the enemy on the right flank just before daybreak, which took place at 4 a.m., as the Brigade was approaching the foot of the kopje, General Wauchope gave the order for the Black Watch to extend, but to direct its advance on the spur in front, the Seaforth Highlanders to prolong to the left, the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders to prolong to the right, the Highland Light Infantry in reserve. Five minutes earlier (the kopje looming in the distance), Major Benson had asked General Wauchope if he did not consider it to be time to deploy. Lieut.-Colonel Hughes-Hallett states that the extension could have taken place 200 yards sooner, but the leading battalion got thrown into confusion in the dark by a very thick bit of bush about 20 to 30 yards long. The Seaforth Highlanders went round this bush to the right, and had just got into its original position behind the Black Watch when the order to extend was given by General Wauchope to the Black Watch. The Seaforth Highlanders and two companies of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders were also moving out, and were in the act of extending when suddenly a heavy fire was poured in by the enemy, most of the bullets going over the men. Colonel Hughes-Hallett at once ordered the Seaforths to fix bayonets and charge the position. The officers commanding the other battalions acted in a similar manner. At this moment someone gave the word "Retire." Part of the Black Watch then rushed back through the ranks of the Seaforths. Colonel Hallett ordered his men to halt and lie down, and not to retire. It was now becoming quite light, and some of the Black Watch were a little in front, to the left of the Seaforths. The Artillery, advancing to the support of the attack, had opened fire from the time it was light enough to see. No orders having been received by the Seaforths, the Commanding Officer advanced the leading units to try and reach the trenches, which were about 400 yards off; but the officers and half the men fell before a very heavy fire, which opened as soon as the men moved. About ten minutes later the Seaforths tried another rush, with the same result. Col. Hughes-Hallett then considered it best to remain where he was till orders came. Meanwhile the 9th Lancers, the 12th Lancers, G Battery R.H.A., and Mounted Infantry were working on the right flank. At 12 noon, I ordered the battalion of "Gordons," which was with the supply column, to support the Highland Brigade. The trenches, even after the bombardment by lyddite and shrapnel since daybreak, were too strongly held to be cleared. The "Gordons" advanced in separate half battalions, and though the attack could not be carried home, the battalion did splendid work throughout the day.

At 1 p.m. the Seaforth Highlanders found themselves exposed to a heavy crossfire, the enemy trying to get round to the right. The Commanding Officer brought his left forward. An order to "Retire" was given, and it was at this time that the greater part of the casualties occurred. The retirement continued for 500 yards, and the Highlanders remained there till dusk. Col. Downman, commanding Gordons, gave the order to retire, because he found his position untenable, so soon as the Seaforth Highlanders made the turning movement to the right.

This was an unfortunate regiment, for Col. Hughes-Hallett had received instructions from me to remain in position until dusk, and the enemy were at this time quitting the trenches by tens and twenties.

I have made use of Col. Hughes-Hallett's report (the acting Brigadier) for the description of the part the Highland Brigade took in this action.

Major-Gen. Wauchope told me, when I asked him the question, on the evening of the 10th, that he quite understood his orders, and made no further remark. He died at the head of the Brigade, in which his name will always remain honoured and respected. His high military reputation and attainments disarm all criticism. Every soldier in my Division deploras the loss of a fine soldier and a true comrade. The attack failed; the inclement weather was against success; the men in the Highland Brigade were ready enough to rally, but the paucity of officers and non-commissioned officers rendered this no easy matter. I attach no blame to this splendid brigade. From noon until dark I held my own opposite to the enemy's entrenchments. "G" Battery, R.H.A., fired hard till dark, expending nearly 200 rounds per gun.

Nothing could exceed the conduct of the troops from the time of the failure of the attack at daybreak. There was not the slightest confusion, though the fight was carried on under as hard conditions as one can imagine, for the men had been on the move from midnight, and were suffering terribly from thirst. At 7.15 p.m. fighting ceased, the Highland Brigade formed up under cover, the Guards Brigade held my front, the Yorkshire Light Infantry secured my right flank, the Cavalry and guns were drawn in to behind the Infantry. The men carried half ration, they had half ration given them from the Supply Column, and they had a lot of rum served out, as well as a good supply of water.

Of the unfortunate affair at Stormberg there is little fresh to be told by Sir William Gatacre. The cause, however, is thus explained:—

"I was aware that the column, when it moved off from Roberts's farm about 12.30 a.m., Dec. 10, was moving too much to the west, and I questioned the guide and Sergt. Morgan, Cape Mounted Police, who were leading us, but both declared they knew the way perfectly, and that they were taking us by a road which, although slightly longer, would enable us to avoid wire and a bad piece of track which the guns would find a difficulty in getting over at night."

"The column therefore proceeded, but half an hour after moving off the Officer Commanding 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles (whose regiment was leading) reported to me that he thought the guide had lost his way. I immediately questioned Sergeant Morgan again, but he assured me that the guides (two Europeans and two natives—police) knew the road accurately, and that he also was positive about it. I made Sergt. Morgan himself go to the head of the column and lead it. I moved myself with the leading battalion and constantly questioned the guide, but was as constantly assured by Sergt. Morgan that we were moving on the right road, though it was further than he had estimated."

"Just before dawn he pointed out to me the kopje which he said was our objective, but it was then I should say about two miles off. I considered that as he reported the remainder of the road to be very good going, it was better, notwithstanding the fatigue of the men, to push on and seize the position. It became a question of doing this, or of retracing our steps to Molteno. The dawn was just breaking when the column was suddenly fired into, before the Mounted Infantry, who were kept behind the Infantry during the night march, had pushed out to cover the front. What happened afterwards is known only too well."

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, March 10.

Lord Roberts's forces, advancing from Poplar Grove towards Bloemfontein, came into collision with the Boers to-day, and some hard fighting ensued. In a message to the War Office, dated from Driefontein at 7.15 a.m. this morning, Lord Roberts stated that the enemy opposed him during Sunday's march, and gave considerable trouble; but owing to the admirable conduct of the troops, they were unable to prevent our force from reaching its destination. The brunt of the fighting fell on the 6th (Gen. Kelly-Kenny's) Division, two units of which, the 1st Batns. Welsh and the Essex Regiments, drove the Boers out of two strong positions at the point of the bayonet, but two officers were killed and 11 wounded. The Boers suffered heavily, 102 of their dead being left on the ground, and we captured about 20 prisoners. The cavalry, it seems, unexpectedly found the kopjes at Driefontein, eight miles south of Abraham's Drift, strongly occupied in the morning by the enemy. An attempt was at once made to outflank the position, which was found to be very strong—the Boers keeping up a heavy artillery fire. At 1.30 p.m. the Sixth Division arrived, and the 13th and 18th Brigades proceeded to clear the kopjes under a hot fire. Our artillery made magnificent practice, though outranged by some of the enemy's guns. The engagement was signalled by many acts of bravery, the storming of the Alexander kopje by the Welsh Regiment being a particularly fine piece of work. The ridge was finally cleared by a bayonet charge, the Boers barely escaping under a heavy fire. Their mobility in moving their guns is pronounced remarkable. The New South Wales Mounted Infantry made a gallant, but unsuccessful, attempt to capture a gun.

Lord Roberts to-day addressed to the Presidents of the two Republics from Driefontein a telegram stating that as another instance has occurred of a gross abuse of the white flag and of the signal of the holding up of the hands in token of surrender, it is his duty to announce that if such abuse occurs again he will most reluctantly be compelled to order his troops to disregard the white flag entirely. The instance occurred on one of the Driefontein kopjes on Saturday evening, and was witnessed by several of Lord Roberts's staff officers, as well as by himself. Lord Roberts also complains of the finding of large quantities of explosive bullets among captured Boer stores, and adds that such breaches of the recognised usages of war and of the Geneva Convention are a disgrace to any civilised Power.

The Standard correspondent, wiring from Venterslei at 5.30 on Monday, describing the fighting on Saturday, says the Welsh and Essex Battalions charged in most gallant style, and drove the Boers before them at the point of the bayonet, killing a considerable number and taking eighteen prisoners. Brigadier Stephenson was warmly congratulated on the conduct of his brigade. The Buffs and the Gloucester Regiment gave valuable assistance in the operations. The Ninth and Sixth Divisions and the Guards Brigade performed a magnificent march of seventeen miles under very hard conditions.

Sir George White met with an enthusiastic reception on his arrival at Pietermaritzburg yesterday, and, though suffering from fever, made a brief response to an address of welcome from the corporation, referring to the courage with which the garrison of Ladysmith had borne the privations of the siege. He mentioned that the Boers had sent trucks to take the garrison as prisoners to Pretoria, but the trucks had returned without them. The sufferings of the defenders of Ladysmith during the last month of the siege were far greater than has yet been realised, and their behaviour furnishes a record of the most noble endurance, heroic resistance, and uncomplaining self-devotion on the part of all, of which the Empire should be proud.

Sunday, March 11.

A telegram reached the War Office from Lord Roberts at Aasvogel Kop in the early morning of Monday, to the effect that his troops had to-day advanced twelve miles in the direction of Ladysmith unmolested. Sir William Gatacre reported to Lord Roberts that to-day he was within a mile of Bethulie railway bridge. The bridge has been partly destroyed and the enemy were holding the opposite bank. Aliwal North was occupied to-day by Brig.-Gen. Brabant after some sharp fighting, in which the British casualties were about twenty.

Monday, March 12.

By Lord Roberts's orders the cavalry divisions pushed on during the morning and seized the railway six miles south of Bloemfontein. Lieut.-Gen. French was afterwards ordered to advance with the object of occupying the railway station itself, and thus securing the rolling-stock. He was vigorously opposed, but succeeded in seizing two hills close to the station which commanded the town.

Sir William Gatacre was on the move to-day. He left Burgersdorp during the morning with several batteries of artillery and mounted infantry, and pushed on towards Bethulie railway bridge over the Orange River. The bridge had been destroyed, and the enemy were preparing to demolish the Waggon Bridge, when they were disturbed and obliged to beat a hasty retreat. They took up a position on the banks on the Cape Colony side, and a fierce artillery duel began which lasted until sundown, our guns, it is said, being worked with "splendid effect."

Tuesday, March 13.

Lord Roberts early in the morning set out from Venterslei, 18 miles distant from Bloemfontein, with 3rd Cavalry Brigade and Mounted Infantry, called up from 7th Division near Petrusburg yesterday to reinforce Gen. French, directing the rest of the force to follow as quickly as possible. In his telegram to War Office, Lord Roberts said:—"Venterslei, March 12, 9.30 p.m.—Our march to-day again unopposed. There are 320 wounded men and about 60 or 70 killed and missing. The wounds are, as a rule, more serious than usual, owing to expanding bullets having been freely used by the Boers."

Wednesday, March 14.

Despatch from Lord Roberts to the Secretary of State for War, received at the War Office at 7.30 p.m.:

"BLOEMFONTEIN, March 13, 8 p.m.—By the help of God, and by the bravery of Her Majesty's soldiers, the troops under my command have taken possession of Bloemfontein. The British flag now flies over the Presidency, vacated last evening by Mr. Steyn, late President of the Orange Free State. Mr. Fraser, member of the late Executive Government, the Mayor, the Secretary to the late Government, the Landdrost, and other officials met me two miles from the town and presented me with the keys of the public offices. The enemy have withdrawn from the neighbourhood, and all seems quiet. The inhabitants of Bloemfontein gave the troops a cordial welcome."

The Daily Mail correspondent was the first to send through any striking particulars of the entry into the Free State capital. In his account published on Thursday morning he said:—

"Overnight General French seized the railway north and south of Bloemfontein, while Lord Roberts despatched a prisoner on parole with a message that he would bombard the city at once unless it surrendered. Thereupon the townsmen, mostly proprietors, grew alarmed, and all the enemy's organisation disappeared. President Steyn evacuated the place hastily, accompanied by the chief members of the Executive, and proclaimed Kroonstad as the capital. He himself fled to Winburg. At last only 3,000 fighting men remained, and in the morning many, finding themselves so weakened, broke their guns, while others, still fearing confiscation, fled north of the Modder, the majority returning to their farms. The remnant still shelled General French at dawn, but the opposition soon collapsed, and at noon the Landdrost Poppinust (? Papenfust) formally came to meet Lord Roberts outside the town. Our General then perambulated the pleasant city, and was received with cheers. The hoisting of the British flag over the Presidency was at once carried out. Eight locomotives and much rolling stock have been taken. Major-General Pretymann has been made Military Governor. Lord Roberts, accompanied by his Staff, has ridden through the town, and been everywhere cheered, while 'God Save the Queen' was enthusiastically sung. The shops are gladly opening, and there is general rejoicing. This is a pleasant country, and it is lovely weather."

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent states that Lord Roberts entered the town at half-past one o'clock, followed by the Gordon Highlanders, a cavalry brigade, and three batteries of Horse Artillery.

The war bulletin issued by the Government of the Transvaal was to this effect:—"Yesterday Bloemfontein was occupied by the British after our burghers had retired in a northerly direction. The seat of Government of the Free State had already been transferred to Kroonstad."

Thursday, March 15.

Lord Roberts telegraphed during the evening that Sir William Gatacre crossed the Orange River in the morning and occupied Bethulie. Major-Gen. Pole-Carew, with 2,000 men of the Guards Brigade, two guns, and a small body of mounted infantry, left Bloemfontein by train during the day to join hands with Gens. Gatacre and Clements. By 4.30 p.m. he had passed Bethany without meeting any opposition. Patrols of Gen. Clements's force effected a juncture with Gen. Gatacre's troops near Burghesdorp, and a patrol left Bethulie Bridge Camp in the direction of Aliwal North, to effect a union with Gen. Brabant's column.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 5th (Field) Company left Aldershot on Monday for South Africa. The 46th Company left Chatham on Thursday for Salisbury Plain. Strong detachments of the 44th Fortress Company and the 48th Submarine Mining Company are to be held in readiness at Chatham to embark for Esquimaux. Capt. T. E. Naish is ordered to join at Chatham to take charge of the detachments.

A gallant deed is reported to have been done by Brevet-Major A. G. Hunter-Weston at Bloemfontein on Monday night. This officer, accompanied by ten men, passed the Boer lines, and succeeded not only in cutting the telegraph line, but in blowing up the railway north of the town. On the following morning a few Boers were discovered on the kopjes south of Bloemfontein, but they were easily dispersed, losing eight killed.

Capt. P. G. Grant performed a signal act of gallantry at Bethulie Waggon Bridge, over the Orange River, on Monday night. To quote the Reuter's correspondent:—

"Under cover of darkness last night, Capt. Grant, R.E., emulated the daring of the Derbyshires in the earlier part of the day. He made his way towards the bridge, which the Boers were jealously watching, and, unobserved, took the charge of dynamite out of the borings prepared by the enemy and dropped them into the river. At the same time he removed the other connecting wires, all danger to the bridge from the mines being thus averted."

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—The Queen, on leaving Windsor Castle for her customary afternoon drive on Wednesday, proceeded to the Victoria Barracks to inspect the hundred men who sail to-day to reinforce the 3rd Batn, at the front. It was not in any sense a formal inspection, but rather a gracious and kindly visit to say "Good-bye and Good-speed." The men in their khaki equipment were drawn up in the centre of the east side of the barrack square, while the 1st Batn. and reservists, with the band and drums and fifes, were paraded around three sides of the ground. The officers present included Major-General Trotter, A.D.C., Col. Richardo, commanding the regiment, Major St. Aubyn, in command of the 1st Batt., and Capt. Earle. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Christian and Princess Henry of Battenburg, in an open landau, drove into the square a few minutes after four o'clock, the band playing the National Anthem and the troops saluting. The troops marched passed in fours, returning gave a royal salute. This was followed by three hearty cheers at the call of Major St. Aubyn. 2nd Lieut. Hermon-Hodge, who goes out with the draft to South Africa, having been presented, the Queen made several inquiries respecting the men. Addressing them, her Majesty said:—

"You are going on a long voyage to a distant part of my Empire to emulate the deeds of your brave comrades. I feel sure that I can look to you with confidence to maintain the honour of the gallant regiment to which you belong."

Major St. Aubyn, in reply, said:—

"I have the honour to express to your Majesty the great gratification and pleasure which your Majesty's words have given to the men of the draft. Those words will never be forgotten, and will be repeated to their comrades in South Africa to show how your Majesty appreciates the services of the 3rd Batn. They will regard those words as a token of your Majesty's appreciation of those services during the present campaign, and as the greatest possible inducement to them to continue to furnish proofs of their devotion to your Majesty and their country."

Again Major St. Aubyn called for "Three cheers for the Queen," which were given with even more heartiness than before as the Royal party drove off the ground. The 2nd Batn. was to have left England on Wednesday for South Africa, but its departure was delayed until yesterday, when it sailed from Southampton. The 2nd Batn. will leave Southampton on Monday next in the Dunera for South Africa. Her Majesty inspected and took leave of the officers and men of the battalion and 2nd Batn. Scots Guards in the garden at Buckingham Palace, on Saturday afternoon last. The Queen was accompanied in a carriage by Princess Henry of Battenberg and Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein. The battalions, which were in khaki marching order, were formed up in line of quarter columns, under the command of Major-Gen. Trotter. Major-Gen. Barrington Campbell was present. Lieut.-Col. F. Lloyd, D.S.O., and Col. Inigo Jones were in command of the battalions. Her Majesty drove round the columns, after which the troops marched past by fours, re-formed line, and gave three cheers for the Queen. The line then advanced in review order, and halted close to her Majesty's carriage, the officers were called to the front and presented to the Queen. Her Majesty afterwards addressed the troops thus:—"I rejoice to be able to see you before you leave for South Africa. My thoughts will always accompany you wherever you go, and I know you will always do your duty as you have ever done." Major-Gen. Trotter, on behalf of the officers and men of the two battalions, made a reply. A man from each of the battalions, together with a piper of the Scots Guards, were then paraded before her Majesty. Major Marshall is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn. on promotion.

Coldstream Guards.—Capt. Garratt has been transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn. on promotion.

Scots Guards.—The 2nd Batn. left Southampton on Thursday in the Britannia for South Africa. The recently-formed 3rd Batn. is being increased from four to its full establishment of eight companies. The officers posted to it are Lieut.-Col. Hon. N. de C. Dalrymple-Hamilton, Majors Harbord (second in command), Drummond and Erskine; Capt. Manners and Hon. W. P. Hore-Ruthven; Lieuts. The colours of the 2nd Batn. were taken on the 9th inst. from Bowerham Barracks, Lancaster, and deposited in the parish church. Canon Bonsey, who received the colours, paid a high tribute to the regiment, mentioning that the colours were presented by the Queen previous to the battalion embarking for the South African Campaign of 1878. Major Thorne is transferred on promotion from the 1st Batn. on passage home, to the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Lieut.-Col. Hon. C. Lambton takes command of the 3rd Batn., and Lieut.-Col. Armstrong of the 4th Batn., on promotion. Capt. Dawkins is transferred from the 2nd Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Lieut. Gibbons has arrived home from South Africa this week. He had a wonderful escape during the fighting on the Tugela, having been hit four times in the space of a few minutes.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th) leaves Tilbury Docks to-morrow in the Braemar Castle for South Africa. Lieut.-Col. Hilton is posted to the new 3rd Batn. on promotion.

East Surrey Regiment (31st).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. left Woking on the 9th inst. for Ireland, and on arrival on Saturday last proceeded to Londonderry, where it took over quarters.

Sherwood Foresters (45).—Reuter's correspondent sends an account of an act of the greatest heroism performed by 2nd Lieut. Popham and a party of men of the battalion on Monday last. The correspondent says:—

A number of incidents of a most exciting character, which will undoubtedly be handed down in history, occurred on Monday evening. For the last day or two the Boers had been engaged in mining Bethulie Waggon Bridge over the Orange River, the operation being carried out under a heavy shell fire from our artillery. Under cover of our guns, Lieut. Popham performed a truly gallant deed. Notwithstanding the hail of shot and shell, he managed to cross the bridge unobserved by the enemy, and cut the connecting wires for firing the mines, thus rendering the plan of the Boers abortive. On advancing through the trenches Lieut. Popham discovered several boxes filled with dynamite. He immediately returned to the British lines, and along with a party of Derbyshires again made his way towards the bridge. Although exposed to a brisk rifle fire from the enemy, the gallant Sherwood Foresters managed to successfully convey the explosives back to camp. This feat is a piece of daring of which we all are tremendously proud in camp. Throughout the day the bridge was nobly held by the Foresters, who resisted all attacks of the enemy to oust them from their position.

Essex Regiment (56th).—Capt. Legge is transferred on promotion to the 1st Batn. (44th) in South Africa.

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—The new 3rd and 4th Batns. are being raised at Woolwich, having been brought on to the Establishment of the Army from the 15th inst.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—Lieut.-Col. Gethin is posted to the command of the new 3rd Batn., and Lieut.-Col. Steele, of the 4th Batn. on promotion.

Highland Light Infantry (71st).—A telegram from the front published a few days ago stated that "the Gordons have now been incorporated with the Highland Brigade, which now consists of five kilted regiments. The Highland Light Infantry, who do not wear kilts, join Col. Smith-Dorrien's force." "Colonel," writing to the Times, says that, rightly or wrongly, in the eyes of the British public the Highland Brigade has come to be looked on as a corps d'élite, and to turn a battalion out of it is to insult that battalion. He points out that the Highland Light Infantry are the second senior Highland regiment in the service, and they bear on their colours more battles, not only than any other Highland regiment, but than any other regiment in the Army, with the one exception of the 60th Rifles, who have four battalions to their two. Having said this much "Colonel" ventures to doubt the accuracy of the report quoted above.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—On arrival home from Ceylon, in the Jelunga on Tuesday next, the battalion will be stationed at Aldershot, not at Devonport, as had been arranged.

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—The officers of the 1st Batn. entertained a number of their friends to lunch at the Citadel on the 24th ult., on the occasion of the presentation of the British Sudan medals to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment. The presentation of medals by Major-Gen. the Hon. R. A. J. Talbot, C.B., took place on the regimental parade-ground. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived in Cairo from Alexandria on the 25th ult. The Egyptian Gazette says:—

The Militiamen are a fine lot of men. The battalion looked, so far as physique is concerned, a great deal more like a Line battalion on its way home after a long period of service in India with a large proportion of time-expired men in its ranks. It compared most favourably, in point of age and physique, with any Line regiment we have seen. It is a great shame, and one which we trust will soon be remedied, that the War Office have not seen fit to clothe the Militia battalions in their full regimentals. It detracts from their soldierly appearance that the men should not yet be supplied with their kilts and khaki. In the warm weather, which is within measurable distance of us, it will be impossible for the men to parade without a khaki outfit, and so we must suppose the military authorities intend them to be supplied with it here.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Lieut.-Col. Macbean has taken over command of this battalion of which he has been second in command, on promotion, and Lieut.-Col. Scott remains in command of the 2nd Batn. (92nd) thus reversing the order of things, as indicated in the London Gazette.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Brevet Lieut.-Col. Monro has been appointed temporary second in command, vice Major Mackenzie, who has been missing since the battle of Magersfontein.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—A letter was lately received by a lady resident of Alexandria from Mrs. Munn, whose husband is a prisoner in Pretoria, begging friends to help her particular fund for the Royal Irish Fusiliers. Mrs. Munn is buying all the necessaries she can in time to send them out to meet the poor fellows on their release, as they have lost absolutely everything. Money, however, can be telegraphed to them, and as the shops are excellent in Pretoria this would appear the more practical plan when the happy moment arrives. Mrs. Munn received two interesting communications. One was from Her Majesty, who desired Sir Arthur Bigge to write and tell her "how very sorry Her Majesty was to think of Major Munn being a prisoner in Pretoria, and how she felt for Mrs. Munn under these unhappy circumstances." The other communication was a message to her from Lord Roberts before sailing: "Say, with God's blessing I hope for brighter days for the brave Royal Irish Fusiliers." It was also interesting to hear on such good authority that it was owing to Capt. Connor's bravery that Talana Hill was taken. He and Lieut. Hills were shot on the very top of it. Capt. Connor's last words were "Come on, boys." "Faugh-a-Ballagh" (Anglice: "Clear the way.") Major Davison was shot through both legs, and Lieut. Carbery very dangerously. The latter is still in hospital. Capt. Silver has had his arm amputated. Capt. Rice is still lame. Major Kincaid, Capt. Pike, Mr. Wortham, and Mr. Dooner are all convalescent in Ladysmith, whilst Mr. Kentish and Mr. Southey have recovered from their wounds in Pretoria. . . . They all feel their position acutely.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (89th).—The colours which were left behind at Colchester when the battalion embarked for South Africa will be conveyed to-day from Colchester to London for safe keeping at the Tower.

Derbyshire Regiment (95th).—Major Watts has been selected for special service in South Africa.

Manchester Regiment (96th), left Southampton yesterday in the Bavarian for South Africa.

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th).—The details left behind at Newry when headquarters left for South Africa arrived at Lichfield on Saturday last, and took over quarters.

Leinster Regiment (100th).—Major Foulerton, Adjutant of the 4th Batn., has been appointed second in command of this battalion.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (101st).—The new 3rd and 4th Bats. are being raised at Portsmouth. The 5th (Militia) Batn. has arrived at Cape Town in the Sumatra.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—It was this, not the 1st Batn. (102nd), which was accorded the post of honour by Sir Redvers Buller when the relieving force marched into Ladysmith. The honour, in the opinion of Sir Redvers, was fairly earned by the splendid gallantry of the battalion throughout the operations for the relief of the garrison.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Capt. Higginson is transferred to the 1st Batn. (102nd), on promotion.

Army Service Corps.—The Secretary for War has approved of a limited number of Militia officers being attached as subalterns, with a view, if suitable, to their being eventually granted commissions in the Corps. They must have served two trainings, or for a period at a depot, or with an embodied Militia or Infantry Battalion, and be under twenty-five years of age, medically fit for service at home or abroad, mounted or dismounted, unmarried, and specially recommended by general officers commanding districts. The 37th, 43rd, and 44th Companies leave Southampton to-day in the Gaika for South Africa.

Army Pay Department.—Changes of Stations, &c.—Lieut.-Col. Dowdall, Dublin to Clonmell. Majors Sheehan, Woolwich to Galway; Lodwick, Chester to Guernsey. Majors Sherrard and Lindop, and Capt. Harvest, Blunt, Moline, and Cooper King to South Africa. Probationers.—Capt. Ravenhill, Royal Scots Fusiliers, to Hamilton; and St. George, West India Regiment, to Portsmouth. Eight more retired officers, are temporarily employed. Cols. Feilden to South Africa, Kneller to London, Caine to Aldershot, Souper to Warley, Drage to Warwick, and Campaign to Chester, Capt. St. John to Hounslow, and Triggs to South Africa. Probationers finally appointed to the Department.—Capt. Bliss, Lancashire Fusiliers, April 29, 1899, and Toller, Lancashire Fusiliers, March 22, 1899; Lieut. Biddulph, R.A., April 25, 1899.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—The medical units of the Eighth Division for South Africa have been made up thus:—No. 21 Bearer Company: Major M. O. D. Braddell, Capt. F. S. Brereton, and Lieut. A. C. Lupton, Royal Army Medical Corps. No. 22 Bearer Company: Major D. M. O'Callaghan, Capt. G. S. Mansfield, Lieut. L. Adams-Williams, R.A.M.C. No. 21 Field Hospital: Surg.-Major G. S. Robinson, Scots Guards; Capt. R. M. Le H. Cooper, R.A.M.C.; and Messrs. E. C. Taylor and C. C. Parsons, civil surgeons. No. 22 Field Hospital: Major D. Stiehl and Capt. P. Evans, R.A.M.C., and Messrs. S. V. Robinson and C. Collier, civil surgeons. No. 23 Field Hospital: Major H. Corr, R.A.M.C.; Surg.-Capt. G. G. Oakley, Halifax Volunteers; and Messrs. K. M'K. Skinner and G. Arnutt, civil surgeons.

In a letter received by the Lord Mayor from Lord Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa says:—"The troops as a whole are looking extremely well and are in good spirits, but I have no finer or keener material under my command than that which has been enrolled in the ranks of the City of London Imperial Volunteers."

The General Purposes Committee of the London County Council report that their attention has been called to the question whether any allowance of pay should be made to persons in the employment of the Council who may join the Royal Reserve. They think that, having regard to the fact that the Royal Reservist receive a bounty from the Government of £22, the position of such men is different to that of those Reservists who are obliged to rejoin the colours on being called upon to do so. They have accordingly decided that men in the employment of the Council who join the Royal Reserve must do so on the understanding that their places will be kept open for them, but that no allowance of pay will be made to them during their service with the colours.

Reviews.

THE 19TH HUSSARS.

Col. John Biddulph has found some very interesting things to say in his history of an excellent regiment now serving with Sir George White. The Nineteenth and Their Times (John Murray) is really an account of the four cavalry regiments which have borne the number 19, and of the campaigns in which they served. Two of them are dismissed very briefly—the first, raised in Ireland in 1759, and known as Drogheda's Horse, having lost its number in 1763; and the second, raised in 1759, which had a brief and uneventful history. The third regiment, which began its existence as the 23rd Light Dragoons, was raised in 1781 for service in India, and it was the first British cavalry regiment that went to that country. It was renumbered as the 19th in 1783, and for 14 years continued the single British cavalry regiment in India. The regiment, when it left this country, was under the command of Sir John Burgoyne, and it is curious to read that he received instructions that his officers should avoid all manner of disputes with the officers of the East India Company, and should use their utmost endeavours to live with them in the greatest harmony. The admonition was necessary, though it might have been more suitably addressed to the Madras Government, for the early history of the 19th illustrates the curious conditions that arose. The greatest jealousy of the King's troops existed, and differences detrimental to the public service ensued. A quarrel was fast ripening in 1783, when Burgoyne's regiment, being reported fit for service, was ordered to take the field, but did not move. The Madras Council thereupon, notified that it was to proceed without its commanding officer, but Burgoyne resolved to act solely under the instructions of Gen. Stuart. The Madras Government was very jealous of Sir Eyre Coote also, and took the curious step of ordering Stuart to march, so that his troops might be far distant when Coote arrived. A letter was addressed by the magnates of Madras to Sir Eyre Coote when he was dying which brought down upon them the sledge hammer of Warren Hastings, and, as Col. Biddulph says, produced a censure that was calculated to penetrate the most pachydermatous self-conceit, though it had no effect on Lord Macartney and his Council. Although Burgoyne was nominated by the Madras authorities to succeed Stuart upon his supercession by the Court of Directors, he himself came under great displeasure, and was very angry at the treatment meted out to his regiment. At last Burgoyne himself was superseded, and, in his indignation, he assembled the King's officers in his tent, and related what had passed, declaring that he would give over the command of the Company's troops but not that of the King's soldiers to any person not regularly authorised by His Majesty. He won his way, but the breach grew wider, and at length he was tried by Court-martial for disobedience, but was honourably acquitted upon every point. These conditions would not have seemed favourable to the operations of the British troops, but as soon as the 19th came into the field their presence inspired respect. Before the first campaign against Tipoo had lasted six months their reputation had penetrated all Southern India, and, as long as they remained in the country, they continued to evoke an amount of interest and attention bestowed upon no other regiment in the Service. One of those who charged with these Light Dragoons at Assaye and Argaum, and who fought his way with them into Vellore, wrote of the 19th that they were "a fine specimen of what a regiment ought to be." "They call themselves the 'Terrors of the East'; and, when at last they embarked for England in 1806, the whole black town of Madras was empty to see them off." The regiment afterwards served in the war with the United States, and was disbanded at the reduction of the forces in 1821. Col. Biddulph devotes three chapters to the services of the present 19th, the "Princess of Wales's Own" Hussars, who were raised in India at the outbreak of the Mutiny, and received their present number on the transfer of the forces to the Crown. They have fought with great gallantry in Egypt in 1882, and particularly distinguished themselves in Sir Gerald Graham's expedition of 1884 and suffered very heavy losses at El Teb (in the mélée in which, of those who lost their horses, Col. Barton alone escaped alive) and again at Tamai. They formed part of the Nile Expedition of 1885, being the only horsemen that accompanied the force. The headquarters were with the desert column at Abu Klea, while a squadron was with the river column at Kirbekan, and a third portion of the regiment saw heavy fighting at Suakin. It was for these services in 1885 that the 19th Hussars received their present distinctive title. The history of the regiments well deserved to be written, and Col. Biddulph's admirable volume merits to rank high amongst regimental histories. It is very well illustrated, and has for a frontispiece a charming portrait of the Princess of Wales.

Dr. Miller Maguire has reprinted from the United Service Magazine his trenchant article on "Our Art of War as made in Germany" (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.). Very many will be glad to possess it, with its additional notes and many illustrations. As our readers know, Dr. Maguire strongly holds that we have had too much of the German generals, that our tables groan too loudly "beneath the ponderous and dreadfully dull tomes of a generation of writers who seem to thrive on a knowledge of the minutest details of only two campaigns," and that well-written accounts of our leading operations in Africa and Afghanistan would be far more profitable to British officers than all German military history put together.

Col. Witte's account of recent progress in the matter of Military Weapons, published in Berlin, by Liebel, under the title of Fortschritte und Veränderungen im Gebiete des Waffenwesens, has appeared in a second edition. It has gained great reputation as giving an excellent account of modern weapons, and it is very well illustrated with diagrams. The book takes account of the arms of all the great Powers and is completed up to date. From the same publisher we have received several parts of a book on the Russian Army, Die russische Armee in Einzelschriften by Baron von Tettau. He deals at length with the constitution and training of the various branches of the Service, their tactics and regulations, and has a good deal that is of interest to say, especially about the Cossacks.

Several publications connected with the war have reached us. Messrs. Methuen are publishing the History of the Boer War in shilling parts, of which the first deals with the preliminary operations, and we can only say that it is well printed and illustrated, and promises to be sufficient in its character. Who's Who at the War (A. and C. Black) is a most useful little book now in its 10th thousand, being got up just in the form of the well-known "Who's Who," and containing a good deal concerning the personalities of prominent actors in the military drama. In many ways it is quite up to date, but it is not quite accurate in regard to the location of the troops. Thankful Tommy (Dean and Son) is a poem by R. Adams Foster, of which we should have liked to quote a verse, capitally illustrated by A. S. Forrest. The verses are excellent, and are the reply of Thankful Tommy to the Absent-Minded Beggar. The little booklet should be very popular.

Miss Mary Louisa White has written, and Mr. Williams, of 32, Great Portland Street, is publishing a "Transvaal War Symphony" for the piano, in three parts, of which Part I. is now ready, price 2s. 6d. nett. The profits realised by the sale of this work will be given to the Mansion House War Fund for so long as the war lasts.

RIFLE PRACTICE IN THE FLEET.

THE usual abstract of returns of rifle practice in Her Majesty's Fleet has recently been issued by the Admiralty. The abstract is in two sheets, one of which gives particulars of the practice by the seamen, the other dealing with the scores of the stokers. The averages made by the ships' companies of 126 commissioned vessels are tabulated in order of merit, and some five-and-forty other ships, including those of the Channel Squadron, are ear-marked as having sent in no returns. Thirty of these are stated to have had no opportunities of carrying out the practice, and it must be assumed, we suppose, that the remaining fifteen were in the same case. It is regrettable that so many ships' companies should have been afforded no opportunities of firing at the ranges during the year 1898-99, the more so because the marksmanship of our seamen with the Lee-

Metford rifle displays a low average of merit. The average was somewhat higher with the Martini-Henry, owing, no doubt, to the larger number of ranges which were available for practice. It was to be expected that the average would fall on the introduction of the new rifle, but it is decidedly disappointing to note that the general average has declined since the last returns were published. Considering first the practice of the seamen we get the following statistics:—

1898-99 ...	130.25	13,189	1,175

The decline of the general average thus amounts to 13 points, which represents a very distinct falling off, due, no doubt, to preventable causes.

Besides this, it must be added that the shooting in 1897-98 was below the standard of efficiency attained with the Martini. Another point which will at once strike naval officers as being unsatisfactory is the proportion of seamen, including petty officers, that is returned as having fired at the ranges. The number is larger, it is true, than in the preceding year, but 13,189 men does not represent one half the strength of the whole seamen class, nor does the elimination of forty-five ships in commission fully account for the balance. It should be possible, we consider, to ensure that every ship's company should fire with the rifle at least once a year, and nothing short of this ought to content the Admiralty. Even then, one could not expect a high average of marksmanship to be achieved, and if the Admiralty aim at producing real efficiency it will clearly be necessary to afford the seamen a great deal more practice than they now obtain. Rifle shooting is by no means so important a branch of the blue-jacket's training as gunnery, and it would be quite possible to waste time in perfecting the shooting with the rifle. Still, the Navy is constantly required to land brigades for punitive expeditions in distant quarters of the world, and such brigades should be able to use the rifle with at least moderate skill. The deficiency of rifle ranges near the home ports may account for the indifferent shooting of many of the vessels tabulated in this return. Yet it seems a pity that the men of the Channel Squadron, who usually serve two years in that fleet, should obtain no rifle practice. The Gibraltar ranges are monopolised by the military, but there is a good one near Bantry Bay which the Squadron might utilise.

Turning to individual ships, one finds a high average of scoring among those heading the list. The gunboat Niger has the honour of heading the list with an average of 174.84; the Northampton, Jason, Curaçoa, and Goldfinch, averaged between 160 and 165 points; and eleven other ships averaged over 150 points. After this, the averages gradually decline. Forty ships are credited with averages of 120 points and under, that is less than half points, and one cruiser brings up the rear with the bad average of 93.2. The proportion of marksmen among the seamen is 9 per cent., and might well be higher, but some of the individual scores are extremely good. Leading Seaman R. Wright was the best shot for the year, with a total of 217 points, and there were several others with scores exceeding 200 points. Curiously enough, the best shot among the stokers, G. Carter, who scored 208 points, was also serving on board the same ship—the Indefatigable. The order of merit of the several squadrons was as under:—East Indies, average 142.84, 601 men; Coastguard and Tenders, average 141.3, 530 men; Particular Service, average 138.86, 447 men; North American, average 138.1, 785 men; Pacific, average 135.3, 357 men; Australia, average 129.9, 754 men; China, average 128.3, 2,485 men; Port Guardships, average 127.2, 692 men; Mediterranean, average 123.7, 5,477 men; Cape and West Coast, average 115.07, 886 men; South-East Coast, average 106.87, 175 men; Daymen, average 120.54, 984 men.

The shooting of the stokers, separately tabulated, also shows a decline in efficiency. A comparison with the previous year is appended:—

	Average points.	Total men.	Marksmen.
1898-99.....	116.6	5,522	145

Here, again, one is glad to be able to note an increase in the actual numbers that fired, although 5,522 men does not represent much more than a third of the total number of stokers on the active list. The fall in the average is less conspicuous than in the case of the seamen, but the proportion of marksmen has fallen from 5 to 2.6 per cent. The stokers of the Goldfinch head the list with an average of 154.35, this little vessel boasting five marksmen out of fourteen men who fired. It is significant that the cruiser whose seamen have the lowest average also brings up the rear in the case of the stokers. In this ship, which shall be nameless, the seamen's average was, as already mentioned, 93.2, whilst that of the stokers was 91.3. An examination of the lists shows further that bad shooting is in a great many other instances common to seamen and stokers in the same vessels, whilst in several of the ships the good averages of both classes seem to point unmistakably to exceptional zeal on the part of the officers. We are sure, however, that Naval officers generally have only to be convinced of the importance of good rifle shooting in the Fleet to be stimulated to greater exertions.

THE HAY-PAUNCEFOTE TREATY.

A DETERMINED attempt is being made by a certain section of American politicians, who are strong in the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, to upset the treaty which has been agreed upon by Mr. Hay and Lord Pauncefote in relation to the Nicaragua Canal. That treaty, as our readers are aware, would have for its effect to neutralise the waterway; but the Foreign Relations Committee has adopted an amendment which would make it a treaty really of Americanisation. A false analogy has been set up between the new waterway and the Suez Canal, and the agitation is active among the jingoes, the yellow journals, and the exponents of the Monroe Doctrine. Among the latter is Captain Mahan, who contributes to Leslie's Weekly an article upon the Monroe Doctrine and the Navy, in which he says that the doctrine in question is opposed to other nations, especially European nations, using the Canal for the support of their interests in gaining positions. He adds that the Monroe Doctrine does not depend upon legal right, but upon what he calls "the moral right of our indispensable interests, deriving its chief support from the fact that it is not worth while to incur our enmity, pushed, perhaps, to the extent of war."

It is, however, contrary alike to diplomatic precedents and to the comity of nations to endeavour to Americanize the Canal, and the analogy set up with the Suez Canal is not less than absurd, for it cannot be pretended that the United States stand in the same political and territorial relation to a canal constructed in the independent states of Costa Rica and Nicaragua as does Turkey to the Suez Canal. Neither Costa Rica nor Nicaragua is an American vassal State, and it has to be remembered that the nations of Europe, and not England only, may have a word in the settlement.

The amendment as proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee would provide that nothing contained in the treaty "should apply to measures which the United States may find necessary to take for securing by its own force the defence of the United States and the maintenance of public order." This clause would, of course, make it permissible for the United States in the event of war to bar the use of the Canal against foreigners. All now depends upon President McKinley. It would have been possible for him to stop the discussion, but it appears to be in the hands of political wire-pullers. The Democrats complain loudly that the Republicans are far too friendly to England, and a public agitation against the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty is an excellent "plank in their platform." We can only hope that wisdom may rule the President's counsels, and nothing may occur to ruffle the calm relations which exist between the two countries.

Navv Notes.

The Companionships of the Bath which have been conferred upon Captain Lambton, of the Powerful, and Captain Scott, of the Terrible, have certainly been well deserved, and this recognition of their work in Natal will be received with great satisfaction by their brother officers as well as throughout the service. It was mainly due to the energy and resourcefulness of these two officers that the tide of Boer rebellion and raid was kept back, and to them also it was owing that the relief of Ladysmith was made possible. Lieutenant F. C. A. Ogilvie, Torpedo and Senior Lieutenant of the Terrible, is promoted Commander for his services with the Naval Brigade in Natal. His daring and gallantry under fire, and the personal example set by him to those under his orders during the action at Colenso on Dec. 15 last, were mentioned in Sir Redvers Buller's dispatches. The General stated that when the oxen teams of their guns had either stampeded or were killed, these officers (Lieutenant Ogilvie and Mr. Joseph Wright), by dint of hard work got the guns and ammunition out of range of the enemy's fire, this devotion to duty has now been met by immediate promotions, and every one in the Naval service will hope that further advantages will attend the career of such a valuable and brilliant officer. We conclude that the officers of these two vessels have been selected at the present moment for reward, as they are leaving the Cape station, and that others will be remembered later on. Most cordial has been the recognition accorded to the officers and men of the Naval Brigade from Ladysmith by the citizens of Durban and Capetown. Addresses to the officers and comforts for the crew have been the order of the day, the loyal people everywhere giving the seamen a hearty welcome, and showing the greatest enthusiasm in honouring them.

In the current number of Macmillan's Magazine there is an interesting article on the Naval Brigade at Graspan by Lieut.-Colonel Willoughby Verner. The kindly criticisms which Colonel Verner makes upon the handling of the seamen and Marines deserves special attention as coming from an experienced observer. The moral he draws that it is sheer waste to employ highly-trained and highly-specialised seamen and Marines in performing duties which are essentially those of infantrymen is one with which it is impossible not to agree. Colonel Verner describes the advance of the Naval Brigade as having been carried out in the approved method, portions of the successive extended lines advancing by short rushes and then lying down so as to obtain what shelter they could while they reopened fire. Presently, however, the Brigade lost its extended formation, becoming what is commonly called "bunched," and he attributes this to the circumstance that the seamen and Marines lacked the necessary practice and experience which would have taught them the best way to continue an advance with as little loss as possible.

It is not a little curious to read this criticism in the light of what happened at Magersfontein and elsewhere, and it is significant that the Colonial officers have made exactly the same remark in regard to the behaviour of our soldiers, while from what the majority of correspondents have told us it would appear that only dearly bought experience has led to our regular troops adopting other tactics and taking full advantage of a scattered formation and all available cover. In reference to this particular engagement it is noteworthy, too, that other military observers have attributed the "bunching" of the attack to the V-shaped formation of the ground, which forced the men, as they advanced, to close in on one another as they approached between the spurs leading to the kopje on which was the enemy. The initial mistake in any case remains with those who ordered the frontal attack to be made.

Several of Colonel Verner's pen pictures and quotations are very happy. He says, "In the breathing space between the rushes of the assailants one conspicuous figure was to be seen standing erect and marking the station taken up by the Naval Brigade. This was their commanding officer, Captain Prothero, R.N., a man of great stature and immense physique, who elected thus to stand leaning on his walking-stick, while his men, lying prone, gathered breath for another rush. How many scores of Mauser bullets were directed against him it would be hard to say. Eventually the inevitable occurred and he was seen to drop, happily only wounded and out of action for a time." Elsewhere Colonel Verner refers to the circumstance that the conspicuous dress of the officers made them an easy target for the enemy, but he adds that all who saw the advance are agreed that no amount of assimilation in dress could have rendered the Naval officers less conspicuous. It was their general bearing and reckless gallantry that caused to be concentrated on them the fire of the Boer marksmen.

Referring to the difficulty in which a military commander sometimes finds himself in regard to the use of a Naval Brigade, Colonel Verner says: "In the instance before us, the Naval Brigade, save and excepting those who formed the guns' crews, had not seen 'much of the fun', (to use their own expressive phrase) two days previously, and in consequence were proportionately dissatisfied. Technically supposed to act as an escort to the guns—a position which, save in unusual circumstances, is a passive and uninteresting one—they one and all yearned for an opportunity to show the soldiers what they could do in the field. The peculiar views of the sailors on this point are well shown by a blue-jacket's retort to a soldier's kindly meant hint that it would be better if the sailors would open out a bit so as not to offer such easy targets to the foe. Quoth the bluejacket, 'Oh, well, you see, after all we don't get such a show as this every day.' They had one and all, from captain to seaman, and from major to private of Marines, come out to take part in the show; and a leading part they certainly took. As the victorious British force stormed over the hill and the artillery crowned the heights to shell the main body of the flying Boers, now some 8,000 yards distant, a staff officer near me said to the commanding officer of the Yorkshire Light Infantry, 'How splendidly your men went up that hill.' The Colonel, while acknowledging the well-merited compliment, added: 'But did you watch the Naval Brigade? By Heaven, I never saw anything so magnificent in my life!' There was no man there that day who will not echo these words."

Commenting upon Mr. Goschen's statement that he was of opinion that in war time the wastage of ships would be faster than the wastage of men Engineering remarks that it would be satisfactory to learn whether this is an expression of the First Lord's own opinion, or whether he was speaking for his naval colleagues. The exact phrase used by Mr. Goschen was "A ship, in these modern days, with the machinery and engines of every kind involved, may easily be put out of action without the crew suffering severely at all." It must be acknowledged that if we take experience as our guide, the greater number of sea fights have been decided, like those which occur on land, by casualties amongst the men. But there have been such great changes in the nature of ships of war that possibly experience even in recent times may be a fallacious guide. At the same time it is difficult to understand how the motive power of a ship can be destroyed, or her guns silenced without at the same time she suffers large loss of life. As our contemporary says:—"The putting of a ship out of action by a mishap to the machinery without a crew suffering at the same time could hardly be more than a defect of an accidental nature which could probably soon be remedied by the engineering staff, or by the aid of one of those floating factories of which we have some hope from Mr. Goschen's speech. The machinery of a warship is generally too well-protected to stand the chance of serious injury, whilst the crew remain unscathed. With the enormous powers of offence of modern weapons, especially the quick-firing and machine guns, neither ships nor crews will go through a close action without suffering severely. If vessels are lost, the crews will probably go with them; and if they are brought into port, it will take far less time to repair the ships than to train fresh men to take the place of those killed or disabled." We seem to remember that Sir William White some time since expressed a similar opinion to Mr. Goschen, and on the whole, while it can hardly be expected that the crews of modern ships will not suffer severely, it is quite possible that the injuries to a vessel may be sufficient to prevent her going into action again for some time while leaving a relatively large proportion of her crew fit for further duty.

A valued correspondent asks if we can tell him why there is no naval officer on the committee appointed to inquire into the administration of the Patriotic Fund. He points out that it is particularly in regard to the naval funds that charges of misapplication have been brought, and that it is still a scandal that the cost of administering these funds should be what it is. We are unable to answer this question, or another he puts to us. Can we, our correspondent writes, tell him of any one instance in which the Navy has had adequate representation upon a joint committee or commission appointed to inquire into matters which indirectly concern the sea service? "To-day, after all that has been done in the way of improving the material and increasing the personnel, the officers and men, with few exceptions, are in exactly the same position so far as pay and prospects and such matters are concerned, as they were at the time the agitation for naval reform was begun. There is much in the papers at the present time about the necessity for increasing the pay of military officers, improving the prospects of Tommy Atkins, and giving the civilian who volunteers to handle a rifle a pension in his old age, but I have not seen any similar propositions with regard to our seamen. Considering his responsibilities, the hardships of his life, and the calls upon his pocket, the naval officer is quite the worst paid servant of the State, and so he is likely to remain until by hook or by crook he can get representation in Parliament."

What may be done in this direction received demonstration last week when the sailors in the House tackled the question of naval rations and urged that the matter should be referred to the consideration of a departmental committee. In our opinion such a course would merely mean shelving the matter, and we are glad to see that Mr. Goschen would have nothing to do with it. The matter of naval dietary is far better dealt with by naval men on the active list. There is then less likelihood of faddists interfering and a greater probability that Jack will be dealt with liberally. As we have often pointed out it is not so much in regard to the quality of the provisions supplied that a change would be generally appreciated. That a fourth meal is highly desirable is amply demonstrated by the way in which both bluejackets and marines now spend their money in the canteen. There might also be a greater variety introduced in the ration with corresponding advantage. It is to be hoped that something will be done in the matter soon, since the existing state of things has for a long time been a cause of discontent and dissatisfaction.

In connection with the discussions which have taken place as to the expediency of the Government controlling the export of Welsh coal, an interesting letter from the Agent-General of New Zealand appears in the Times. Mr. Reeves calls attention to the excellence of the coal which is found in the Westport district in New Zealand, coal which is as nearly as smokeless as the best South Wales, and equal to the best quality of that fuel as a generator of steam. He reminds us that Admiral, then Captain, Kane attributed the preservation of the Caliope in the hurricane at Apia Bay to the fact that the bunkers were supplied with Westport coal. We believe there is no question that this coal is held in high esteem by naval engineers, but there have been difficulties in the way of obtaining it, principally due to its price. Mr. Reeves states that great harbour improvements have recently been carried out at Westport, and that at the present time a steam collier drawing 18ft. and able to carry 3,500 tons of coal could easily and safely enter the port and be berthed there. The price, too, he states, is appreciably lower than that now charged at Cardiff. In these circumstances it would certainly appear that, as he says, price, quality, and accessibility combine to make the Westport coal worth the attention of all those interested in the efficiency of the Imperial Navy.

The finding of a Naval Court which was held on board the Furious at Puerto de la Luz last month to investigate the circumstances attending the stranding of the transport Denton Grange, of London, while on a voyage from Southampton to Capetown, has been issued by the Board of Trade. According to the report, the transport arrived off Las Palmas at night. The master, with the consent of the pilot, weighed anchor and attempted to enter the harbour. Before he could get steerage way on his ship, she being still broadside on to the sea and wind, she was set towards the shore. Finding this, and that she would not answer her helm, he anchored again at once. In swinging she tailed on to and struck an uncharted rock, the sea swinging her head round and sweeping her up on to the reef. The Court, having regard to these circumstances, found that the master, in his anxiety to carry out his orders to coal and proceed on his voyage to South Africa with the utmost possible despatch, committed an error in judgment in entering the port under the conditions of wind and sea prevailing at the time, whereas under ordinary circumstances he should have remained outside till daylight. The Court further found that the officers and crew conducted themselves properly and that no blame attaches to them. The Court, whilst refraining from dealing with the master's certificate, has ordered that he be more careful in future.

The question of Sir Charles Dilke as to the relative powers of French and British guns, apparently based on the writings of M. Claudinon and General de la Roque would not, we believe, have attracted as much notice as it has if Mr. Goschen had been a little less cautious and official in his reply. The French gun referred to as compared with the gun of similar calibre in our service, has, we understand, somewhat greater muzzle velocity, and therefore a lower trajectory and greater penetration at short ranges. Naturally, with an armour-piercing gun, such an advantage is considerable, and is not compensated for by the circumstance that our gun carries further and hits harder at the greater distance. Moreover, it is in dispute whether these advantages do lie with our gun. But admitting that this particular French gun has, on trial, given better results than the similar gun in our service, it does not necessarily follow that we should be alarmed. It merely shows that what has happened before will happen again, that there is no such thing as finality about artillery improvement, and that we must keep moving if we wish to be up to date. It was only the other day that we were ahead of France with the 6in. quick-firer; now they have scored a point. But to get real value they must mount their new weapon afloat as quickly as we did the 6in. Meanwhile the Director of Naval Ordnance is not the man to let the grass grow under his feet, and even if the Ordnance Committee do hamper his efforts, he should, with the assistance of the Vickers and Elswick firms, be able before long to make a counter-move and restore the equilibrium.

The Queen will, according to present arrangements, embark at Holyhead in the Royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, for Kingstown, on the 3rd prox., escorted by the Royal yacht Osborne and the cruisers Australia and Galatea. The ships of the Channel Squadron will, it is reported, meet the Royal flotilla in the Irish Sea, and remain in Dublin Bay during the Queen's visit.

H.R.H. the Duke of York intends making the Cottage at Sandringham his headquarters until the first week in May.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, went to Naples last month on short leave of absence, and is delayed there through indisposition. An improvement in his health, we are glad to say, now assures an early return to his port duties.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, commanding the Channel fleet, is not likely to leave the coast of the United Kingdom for some time, the usual cruise of the vessels under his orders to the Mediterranean having been further deferred.

Vice-Admiral H. C. St. John will, we are sure, receive much sympathy at the loss of his son, Lieut. Percy St. John, who died this week at Gibraltar. He only relieved Lieut. Tillard last month in command of the Cormorant, depot ship, which appointment includes the care of torpedo boats in commission as well as those in the Reserve, and displayed ability in carrying out those duties at that important naval base. He became Lieut. in 1887.

Rear-Admiral Sir R. H. Harris, Commander-in-Chief at the Cape of Good Hope, recently opened a Sailors' and Soldiers' Home at Simon's Town, the Naval headquarters, and in an effective speech reviewed the necessity for such institutions whenever naval and military forces were stationed at seaports, either in or out of the United Kingdom.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief in Australia, lost, we regret to say, his eldest surviving son, a Lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade, at Ladysmith on the 22nd ult. We are sure that the sympathy of all ranks of the Naval Service will be accorded this distinguished flag officer in his sad bereavement.

Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, left Valparaiso on Sunday last. The gallant Admiral is promoting the formation of a club at Esquimalt for the warrant officers serving under his command, and has asked the Admiralty to assist in its initiatory stage such a desirable undertaking.

Rear-Admiral Burges Watson, left yesterday in the P. and O. steamship Palawan, for Malta, to relieve Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, Admiral Superintendent at that naval establishment.

Captain the Hon. A. Curzon-Howe, of the Ocean, left Devonport on Tuesday last for Gibraltar to relieve the Hood on the Mediterranean station. The good-will and excellent discipline that always obtained in previous commands of this gallant and distinguished officer will undoubtedly prevail with all who now have the pleasure of serving under him.

Captain F. H. Henderson, of the Hermes, arrived on Monday at Jamaica in that cruiser, she having been towed from Nassau, Bahamas by the Crescent, which latter vessel left for Bermuda on Wednesday. Captain Henderson will refit his ship at Jamaica, but Bermuda would not have been a much longer journey, where greater facilities exist for important repairs.

Captain G. A. Giffard, of the Comus, is due at Devonport early next week for transfer to the Charybdis, to which cruiser the majority of his present officers are appointed.

Captain L. E. Wintz, of the Furious, is relieved by Captain F. J. Foley, of the Pactolus, and commissions the Goliath on the 27th inst. to replace the Victorious on the China station. Captain Anson Schomberg will bring the latter vessel to Malta and pay her off, after which she will be re-commissioned by Captain G. F. King-Hall and the officers and crew of the Revenge. Captain Schomberg will return to England in the Revenge with the ship's company late of the Victorious.

Captain H. P. Routh, of the Calliope, and the officers and men serving under him were accorded a very pleasurable reception at Barcelona last week.

Captain Fitz-Haugh E. Crowe (retired) left Southampton on Saturday last for South Africa in the Union steamship Moor, to take up the appointment of British Consul for the Delagoa Bay district, at which important post his services will undoubtedly prove advantageous. This gallant officer, in addition to a large share of hard work while on the active list, accompanied the late Sir William Hewett, while Vice-Admiral and Commander-in-Chief of the East India Station, on a mission to the King of Abyssinia, 1884.

Captain R. S. W. Cumming, of the Hermione, rendered valuable assistance to the French mail steamer, La Seyne (Messageries Maritimes) while ashore near Singapore in January last. The owners have, according to the local press, given one thousand dollars—about £97—to the War Relief Fund, in recognition of the aid so generously accorded them by Captain Cumming and those under his command.

Commander Herbert Lyon, of the Curacoa, was well to the front in a cricket match at Las Palmas at the end of last month, between a team from that cruiser and one from the Arrogant. Unfortunately, a good score on the part of the gallant officer was prematurely ended by an accident, but he had the satisfaction of knowing that his side were the victors.

Commander A. H. Limpus, of the Terrible, with the Naval Brigade under his command, recently employed with General Sir Redvers Buller's force, arrived at Durban on Monday last for re-embarkation, and were most enthusiastically received.

Commander F. H. P. W. Freeman, of the Mohawk, had the honour of conveying Lieut.-General Sir George White, V.C., the gallant defender of Ladysmith, from Durban to East London this week.

Commander Hon. H. A. Stanhope, of the Beagle, paid off that vessel on Wednesday last at Portsmouth.

Commander C. H. Simpson, appointed to the Egeria, left Liverpool on the Dominion steamer Vancouver on Friday in last week for Canada, with a new crew for his future command and naval ratings for the Pacific station, and proceeds to Esquimalt by the Canadian Pacific route.

Lieut.-Commander Philip Walter, of the Harrier, pays off that vessel at Devonport on Saturday next.

Sub-Lieutenants E. A. Rushton and R. G. B. Dewar have been promoted Lieutenants after one year's junior commissioned service for meritorious examinations at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, and the Scientific Schools at Portsmouth.

Lieutenant J. Anderton, commanding a battery of Natal Naval Volunteers, with General Sir Redvers Buller's force, reached Durban last week, and stated that when he went to the front the Volunteers found their guns too small and short of range to be of any use against the enemy. Thanks, however, to Captain Percy Scott, they were placed in possession of practically perfect guns with which they were very proud to be entrusted. We hope later on to have fuller accounts of the good work done by the Naval Volunteers of "gallant little Natal," as it is evident that with proper artillery they proved themselves worthy comrades of our Naval brigades.

Captain J. H. Abrahall, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth), and Captain N. F. Sampson-Way, R.M.L.I. (Chatham), have been allowed to exchange divisions.

Army Foreign.

The total number of conscripts for the French Army last year shows a reduction of nearly 15,000 on that of the previous year. This noticeable drop has caused some uneasiness. The fundamental cause of the diminution is doubtless due to the stationary state of the population, but it is also a fact that there has been a special cause at work. The medical examination of the conscripts has been far more severe than for several years past. In 1894 General Mercier, alarmed at the dwindling of the annual contingent, ordered the military medical board—the conseils de revision as they are termed—to pass men who, though they would not be fit to make active soldiers, might yet be utilised for duties that do not involve actual fighting. Their presence in the ranks would thus set free a number of men capable of going to the front, but whose occupation would make them non-combatants in the event of war. There have since been complaints that some of the men passed as the result of General Mercier's instructions suffered in health in consequence of their incorporation. M. de Freycinet, in response to public opinion, decided to return to the old system, and the military doctors have, therefore, had to show themselves much stricter. The resulting deficit that has to be faced is, however, a serious matter.

The Italian Government has now made a definite announcement concerning the extraordinary credits which are to be demanded for the Army. The purpose is to complete the preparations for National defence by new fortifications and armaments, by providing modern guns for the artillery, with an adequate supply of munitions, and to organise a system of mobilisation which has been laid down by the Defence Committee. The total sum proposed to be expended is 393,180,000 lire, or, in round figures, £16,000,000—the outlay being spread over a period of twenty-five years, and a sum of about £5,000,000 being expended during the first quinquennium. The first investigations, which were made at the Ministry of War, fixed the necessary outlay approximately at 425,000,000 lire, but the successive inquiries of the Defence Committee reduced it to 400,000,000 lire, and the present proposal is based upon a further reduction introduced by General Peloux. The difference between the two figures results chiefly from the fact that the first proposals contemplated the creation of twenty-five batteries of Field howitzers (personnel and material), while the present scheme will constitute these batteries by simply transforming twenty-five field batteries. In other words, it was intended to make an organic increase of twenty-five batteries, but that idea has been abandoned.

General Février, formerly Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, and an officer of high repute, lately addressed a very singular letter, at the request of a correspondent, to the Echo de Paris. His subject was the present state of the French Army, and he said that though he might be influenced by his recollections of its former state, he desired to be impartial. He considers that the intentions of the French Government are too plainly indicated. The events of the past year mark the commencement of a plan conceived in view of the transformation of the Army. He believes it to be as clear as day that the men who are responsible for the external policy of France dream of universal peace, and renounce all thought of military activity abroad. Of this the humiliations lately suffered are ample proof. The Army, therefore, is not a force to meet external foes, but is directed against the country itself; it becomes a sort of civic guard for the defence of institutions which are dear to the Government and costly to the country. These leaders would destroy the military spirit and respect for discipline, discredit the chiefs, and break the confidence of the soldier. The military code of justice is expected by General Février presently to disappear, when the Army will become more civil than military. Then will everything become possible, for the Army, changed into a political instrument, will be used by one side and the other, and anarchy will be the normal condition, while abroad France will become a negligible quantity. The General concludes by saying that since he left the Grand Chancellorship he has retired into his tent and only craves oblivion.

Naval Foreign.

The French have lately had two mishaps with their torpedo craft. The Mediterranean Squadron was engaged in evolutions, and the boats were running torpedoes. The Cyclone was towing a target at 10 knots with a cable of 230 yards, but two torpedoes, discharged by the Flibustier, proved very erratic. One torpedo, with a range of about 500 yards, instead of reaching the mark, passed ahead of the Cyclone, while the second struck that boat in the bows, breaking a hole into the forward compartment. She was able to proceed to Toulon for repairs. The deviation of the torpedoes has caused a good deal of comment, but it does not seem to be known whether the fault was in themselves, or in defective aim, or in a combination of both causes. The other mishap was in the case of the Hallebarde, which, during the evolutions of the squadron, came into collision with the Gaulois, a compartment on the starboard side being broken into. The Hallebarde proceeded to Toulon, escorted by the Dunois.

The Germans are about to establish at Dar-es-Salaam, near Zanzibar, on the East African coast, a fortified coaling or refitting station. A contract has been signed for the construction of a floating dock capable of receiving the largest cruisers and merchant ships, and it is to be so arranged that it can be enlarged at need. The provision of coaling and repairing facilities in the Indian Ocean or on its borders is necessarily important to Germany, since she has a large commerce in that region and her new possessions in China to provide for.

It is stated that the Russian battleship Sinope, in the Black Sea, is to be provided with Belleville boilers fitted with economisers. Boilers of the Niclausse type are being fitted in the Russian ships building at Philadelphia. It appears that the cruiser Askold, intended to be of 6,500 tons, will have an increased displacement owing to the intention of adding largely to the bunker capacity in order to more than double the range of action, which was considered to be too restricted. In effect, as originally designed, the cruiser could only steam at forced draught for fifty hours, with her normal provision of coal. The Askold is in hand at the Germania Yard, Kiel. It is stated from St. Petersburg that eleven destroyers of the Sokol type, but a little larger, 350 tons and thirty knots, which are in hand, have received the names of Baklan, Bekass, Diatol, Brozd, Gorlitz, Gratch, Kubik, Perepel, Shtchegol, Skvoretz, and Stvige.

The Italian papers were not well pleased with the new battleship, Regina Margherita, 13,500 tons, which is in hand at Spezia, and it is stated that her quick-firing armament will be increased. It is now seen that the original provision was insufficient, and did not take account of the lesson of recent wars. To the four guns of 12in. calibre, and to the four quick-firers of 9in. calibre, twelve of 6in. and eight smaller will be added, to be placed in the battery and be additional to the small calibre guns on the superstructure. The intention is evidently to add greatly to the gun-fire of the ship, which must be something of a compromise, if it be true that her protection has been sacrificed to her speed of twenty-one knots. The Yacht states that the constructive department persists in wishing to bring together incompatible elements and that a hybrid type must result.

The Kronstantzki Viestnik publishes the following list of Russian warships on foreign stations:—Nagasaki: Navarin and Cissoi Veliki, battleships; Admiral Kormlov, cruiser. Mozanpo: Rossia, Rurik, Dmitri Donskoi, and Zabiaka, cruisers; Vaadmik, torpedo gunboat. Port Arthur: Vladimir Monomach, cruiser; Korietz and Sivutsh, gunboats. Hong Kong: Razbojnik, cruiser. Shanghai: Gremiaschitchi, gunboat. Fusan: Boler, gunboat; Gaidamak, torpedo gunboat. Fuchai: Mandshur, gunboat. Chemulpo: Otvajni, gunboat. On the way to the Far East: Petropavlovsk, battleship, and Gilyak, gunboat (Aden); Admiral Nachimov, cruiser (Kiel). Returning from the Far East: Pamyat Azoba, cruiser (Suez). Pola: Imperator Alexander II.

battleship. Toulon: Khabry, gunboat. The Piraeus: Abrek, torpedo gunboat; and torpedo boat No. 119. Patras: Torpedo boat, No. 120. Smyrna: Zaporzetz, gunboat. Atlantic: Herzog Edinburgski and Djighit, cruisers.

We have more than once drawn attention to the irregularities which have existed in the status of French Lieutenants. There was up to June, 1896, a special list of officers who were assigned to shore-going billets, but, inasmuch as no regulation of their position existed, they had to be restored to the general list, whence many hardships occurred in regard to promotion, and a good deal of bitterness ensued. The lieutenants on the general list found themselves suddenly confronted in the promotion lists with comrades who had renounced prospects of promotion in exchange for the comforts of the shore. The Minister of Marine has, therefore, just presented a bill to the Chamber to regulate the matter afresh. The shore-going list is to be re-instituted, and a provision will be made that those officers who elect to be placed upon it can in no case be restored to the general list. The Commanders renounce all claim to promotion in the general list, while the Lieutenants rank for promotion upon the system of one-half rising by seniority and the other by selection. The provisions of the new measure will regulate the promotion and retirement of these officers, so that no further trouble may occur. Their position is somewhat analogous to that of British officers who join the Coast Guard.

The annual American publication of "Notes on Naval Progress" has been issued from the office of Naval Intelligence. In an introductory note it is explained that the delay in the appearance of the volume, which should have gone to press in July, was due to the Spanish war and the demand on officers for duty elsewhere. The first place is given to Lieut.-Commander George H. Peters's article on "Recent tendencies of foreign naval development and the effect thereon of the recent war with Spain." Lieutenant S. E. W. Kittelle, U.S.N., discusses the creation and maintenance of a German battle fleet, and writes some notes on boilers and turbines. Other contributors are Lieutenant C. C. Marsh, Lieut.-Commander W. H. Driggs, Lieutenant W. L. Howard, while Naval Constructor Sussenguth, of the German Navy, writes on the "Principal Navies of the world in 1898."

NAVAL TRAINING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Now that the question of doing away with the Training Squadron is being discussed, I think it would not be out of place to call attention to the training of our officers, more especially the young Lieutenants who now do all the watch keeping in our Fleets. In former days the officer of the watch was a most important person and responsible for the ship directly to the Captain; all watch drills and exercises were carried out by him, and in the old masted ships the making and shortening of sail, shifting of spars, &c., gave him good experience and confidence; and he as a rule had the Captain at his elbow to help him with his advice, from which he could learn much. Now all this is changed; the officer of the watch seldom comes in contact with the Captain, has little to do with the men, and rarely gives an order to the watch; all the watch drills and exercises are carried out by the executive officer, who has in fact quite usurped the duties of the officer of the watch, much to the detriment of the latter. The gunnery and torpedo specialists also give much less chance to the Lieutenants gaining experience in those departments, and I have no hesitation in saying that in the majority of our ships the teaching and training of our junior commissioned officers is not sufficiently studied considering its importance. Captains should see that they do their legitimate work, such as watch drills, divisional drills, &c., and give them, where possible, more responsibility.

The total area of land acquired by the Government for military purposes on Salisbury Plain is forty-one thousand acres.

The Secretary for War has just approved revised regulations for recruiting for the Regular Army and Militia, cancelling the regulations promulgated in 1895 and many subsequent orders concerning them, and the new regulations are now being issued.

The 2nd Manchester Regiment, which leaves Aldershot this week for the seat of war, has deposited its regimental colours in the Town Hall, at Manchester, and has sent the whole of its regimental plate for safe custody to the Chancery Lane Safe Deposit Company.

In consequence of the great demand for officers for Army service, it has been decided to offer at once two commissions in the Royal Artillery to each Militia Artillery corps, and two in the Line Infantry to each Militia battalion, whether embodied or not. Also Army commissions as second lieutenants are to be given to officers selected from many corps of the Volunteer service. Instructions have been given for names of candidates to be submitted to the War Office as early as possible.

A return showing the establishment of each Militia regiment in the United Kingdom, and the numbers present, absent, and wanting to complete, as well as the number of Militia Reserves enrolled and effective at the training of 1899, was issued yesterday. It gives the total number enrolled of all ranks as 109,551, which leaves a net total of 20,249 to complete the establishment. The number of men of the Militia Reserve effective at inspection was 29,498, and the number enrolled for Militia Reserve since the previous training is 4,608. The full total of Militiamen of all ranks who were present at training was 93,123.

A ROYAL NAVAL MEDICAL RESERVE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—One of the lessons which has been taught us by the present campaign in South Africa is the value of competent reserves in all branches of the services. The arrangements made by the Army Medical Department have been highly praised, but it was found necessary, almost from the start, to make a large call on civilian doctors. In a purely naval war, however, the same extraneous help could not be obtained with equally satisfactory results, for many civilians would be severely handicapped on board ship and in proportion useless, however willing. The sea demands a certain habit and a certain knowledge of maritime ways and customs which is only acquired by long voyages. Great inducement has been held out, of late years, to the officers of the large mail companies to join the Royal Naval Reserve with most excellent results. It has therefore occurred to me that, at the present juncture, a movement for the establishment of a Royal Naval Medical Reserve would meet a similar want, and indeed with similar success. There are numbers of medical men, who have passed several years of their career in the service of one or another of the mail lines, who are used to the sea, have a thorough knowledge of the medical aspects and hygiene of medical life, who are experienced in tropical diseases, and thoroughly inured to rapid changes of climate. With very little expense to the State these men would surely form a most serviceable reserve, to be drawn on in case of emergency. A minimum of, say, two consecutive years at sea, with a period of drill, a special test examination and an age limit of thirty-eight—being ten years above that required for entrance into the service—would form a suitable basis for the elaboration of conditions. I shall be very pleased to receive communications from persons in sympathy with such a movement, or who have suggestions to offer concerning it.

FIELD GLASSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

THE UNITED SERVICE GAZETTE, Jan. 27, 1900, says on The Question of Field Glasses:—It is unquestionable that a very large number of the bulky and heavy Field Glasses which are being so generously purchased for our volunteers, and which have to be carried across the shoulders or at the belt, will never see the front at all. If not discarded at Cape Town, very few will get further than the chief depots. It is astonishing how deceptive the weight is. Have the glass weighed before you buy it, and you will often find that one which you would estimate at half a pound weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and the hard leather case 50 per cent. more. Here the Aitchison Patent Pocket Field Glass comes in. It weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick, and its power and definition are equal to many glasses four times the size sold at three times the price. It will stand an astonishing amount of rough usage.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

Bloemfontein has become for a time the focus of the war; a strategical point of vast importance. It occupies geographically the centre of the British advanced front as at present traced, a vast crescent stretching from Warrenton on the Vaal, forty-five miles north of Kimberley, to Ladysmith, the chord of the arc measuring 300 miles. Putting on one side for a moment the claims of the three heroic sieges, the most striking episodes of the war, so far, have been the determined efforts, four times repeated, by Sir Redvers Buller to burst through the Tugela lines, and the masterly strategy that gave Bloemfontein into the hands of Lord Roberts. To compare these two is impossible, so essentially do they differ in all details; but to say that they were complementary to one another would only be to state the truth. If the invasion of the Free State from the west drew 4,000 or more Free-Staters from the investment of Ladysmith, and made Sir Redvers Buller's heavy task more possible, so the pressure of the British Army of Natal upon the Tugela held 16,000 Boers in fortified hills who otherwise might have swelled the force sent through the Drakensbergs to the relief of Cronje. When all the circumstances are taken into account it will be allowed that the honours of these great achievements falling to the Eastern and Western armies must be equally divided. Thanks to the rapidity of General French's advance after the battle of Driefontein, on the 10th inst., the remainder of Lord Roberts's march on the capital was unopposed. A strong entrenched position had been held by the burghers at Brand Kop, five miles south of the town and lying across the railway, but it was hurriedly vacated when the unlooked-for presence of our cavalry on its flank rendered it untenable, and Bloemfontein was abandoned by its President and his armed forces. Moreover, in other ways the fates were unpropitious. General Joubert, with 2,000 burghers from Natal, due at Bloemfontein in the early morning of the 13th, was prevented from reaching that place through the bold act of Major Weston, R.E., who penetrated in the darkness through the enemy's lines and blew up a culvert on the railway north of the town. As a result of this achievement much rolling-stock was secured. Joubert's force and the retreating Free State burghers are expected to make their first stand at Randfont, thirty-three miles to the north, but it is at Kroonstad, some eighty miles still further north, now declared the capital of the Orange State, that the most serious opposition south of the Vaal may be looked for, unless all further attempt to defend the Free State should be abandoned as hopeless.

pontoons near to Norval's Pont. The road bridge at Bethulie was saved from destruction by the gallantry of 2nd Lieutenant Popham, of the Sherwood Foresters, who crossed the bridge and disconnected the wires under fire, and of Captain Grant, R.E., who removed the charges and threw them into the river. On Sunday, the 18th General Gatacre's Division was established at Springfontein, whence a detachment had occupied Smithfield. General Clements had advanced a considerable distance into the Free State, making for Bloemfontein, via Phillipolis and Fauresmith. General Brabant was already on the north bank of the river beyond Aliwal North, and has since pushed on with his mounted column occupying Rouxville on Monday. He will probably move northwards along the Basutoland border. The Scots Guards hold the railway at Edenburg. By these well-timed and simultaneous movements, together with the despatch of a cavalry brigade from Bloemfontein towards Thabachu to receive the submission of the burghers, the whole of the Orange Free State south of a line drawn from Jacobsdal to Ladybrand is being enclosed as in a net. All Boers contemplating further resistance are moving north of that line, while to the south the burghers in large numbers are making their submission, giving in their arms and returning to their neglected farms under the conditions of Lord Roberts's proclamation. Except at the wrecked railway bridges spanning the Orange River, through communication now exists between Bloemfontein and the seaports of Cape Colony, and the first great act of preparation for a further advance has been accomplished. Lord Roberts is now practically independent of the western line, and his land transport has become available for the forward move.

The temporary lull in the operations of the main British army does not extend to the force under the orders of Lord Methuen in and around Kimberley. A column detached from this force, pushing northwards, had a sharp engagement with the enemy on the 16th inst. at Fourteen Streams, where the destruction of the railway bridge by the Boers was prevented, and the Pont secured. Further fighting also occurred at the same place on Sunday. Fourteen Streams is a strategically important point on the Vaal forty-five miles north of Kimberley, being a starting-point for operations either due north towards Mafeking, or north-east into the Transvaal. There was a report, still needing confirmation, that British troops had occupied Christiana on the latter line, twenty miles from Fourteen Streams. A column working along this line towards Klerksdorp would eventually threaten the right of any positions taken up by the Boers on the north bank of the Vaal. The co-operation of such a flanking column with the main army advancing northwards from Bloemfontein, could not fail to render the enemy's defence of the Vaal impracticable.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

BLOEMFONTEIN, occupied on the 13th inst. by Lord Roberts after the surrender of its citizens, bears no signs of a vanquished town. Already it wears a smiling aspect, and has returned, apparently with a sense of relief, to the ordinary avocations of peaceful life, and British bands playing their national airs in the market-square are greeted by cheering and sympathetic crowds. With the silken banner, the work of Lady Roberts, waving over the place, at once the external symbol of conquest and the reminder of duty, the Commander-in-Chief lost no time in taking measures for securing the internal administration of this pleasant town, a very haven of rest to his troops after their arduous labours, heavy marches, and real privations in the waterless and inhospitable western veldt. He has appointed as its military governor Major-General G. T. Pretymann, C.B., an artillery officer of tried experience, who has seen much distinguished service in other lands, under his Lordship's command. Already markets have been established, the country-folk showing every desire to co-operate and bring in their produce. A special police force composed of young burghers from the neighbourhood, has been formed, and the Law Courts have resumed their sittings. This condition of quietude within the capital of the Orange State is only rendered possible, however, by the presence of 40,000 British troops encamped on the surrounding plains resting now for a brief space, but soon to resume their advance for the completion of the stern work that still lies before them.

Mindful of the importance of securing the railway from Bloemfontein to the Orange River, Lord Roberts on the 15th inst. despatched 2,000 of the Guards' Brigade with gun and mounted infantry by rail, southwards, to join hands with Generals Gatacre and Clements, both of whom crossed the Orange River on the 15th, the former by the road bridge at Bethulie, and the latter by but watchful, biding the time when his army, acting in co-operation with that of the Commander-in-Chief, although operating independently, can again strike the enemy with full effect.

Natal is not yet, after more than five months of warfare, cleared of the enemy, and the frowning crests of the Biggarsberg, strongly entrenched, bar the way. It is unlikely, however, that the British General will accept battle, as the enemy would desire, by a frontal attack. Wide turning movements are possible to both east and west, which in the application of sound strategy would cause the northern passes to become automatically open. The British army now occupies widely extended camps from Acton Homes and Dewdrop in the west, to Elandslaagte and Sundays' River in the east, with outposts pushed forward towards Van Reenen's Pass on the one side, and Helpmakaar on the other. The patrols on both sides are in touch, and indulge in daily sniping. The Boers are supposed to have 14,000 men and twenty guns in the Biggarsberg. They have also been found by Lord Dundonald to be in force in Van Reenen's, Tintwa, and De Beer's Passes, and are reported to have destroyed the town of Pomeroy by fire.

As the months roll on, the British forces in South Africa swell to ever vaster dimensions, and shortly a new column of colonial horse, 5,000 strong, to be known as the Rhodesian Field Force, will start for the front under the command of General Sir F. Carrington. Its sphere of operations will lie in the far north, and its duty will be to prevent a Boer trek into Rhodesia. By degrees the Transvaal will feel the tightening grip by a ring of armed power that must prove crushing and irresistible.

The central military situation affords legitimate grounds for satisfaction. The recent progress of the war has been rapid and its results decisive. The submission of the occupied portion of the Orange State is almost complete. Rebellion in the eastern districts of Cape Colony has collapsed, and that in the west is in a fair way to being stamped out by Lord Kitchener. Prieska was reoccupied on Monday by his colonial troops without resistance, the rebels laying down their arms. The district of Carnarvon has been swept to a point beyond Van Wyk's Vlei, where the rebels were reported to be in force, and several were captured by the New Zealanders. One spot alone in the whole theatre of war still rivets the anxious and sympathetic attention of all. Mafeking still endures the daily increasing miseries attending a prolonged investment. Cape Town is confident that any moment may bring news of its release, and has decided to celebrate the happy event by a public holiday. But, on the other hand, General Snyman, assuming the offensive, has advanced against Colonel Plumer's camp at Lobatsi in considerable force, and a smart engagement took place on the 15th inst. In the absence of news of a co-operating relief force from Kimberley this is somewhat disquieting. Still, the latest word, dated the 10th inst., from the little "hamlet in the far-off western veldt," showed it to be yet undaunted, and, with energies renewed by the Queen's recent gracious message, resolved to hold out to the last.

Army Notes.

The death of General Sir William Lockhart is a great loss, not alone to the Indian Army, but the British Empire. As the Viceroy has said in a Gazette extraordinary:—"In a military career of exceptional brilliancy in many parts of the Empire, Sir William Lockhart has shown himself to be a brave soldier, an intrepid explorer, and a natural leader of men." He knew the Indian frontier as few others knew it, for he had served for years on the Staff of the Punjab Frontier Force, which he ultimately commanded and raised to the highest degree of fighting efficiency. Loved by officers and men alike, his qualities were those which commanded the admiration of all with whom he was associated. His ability was recognised by everybody with whom he had official dealings, and the difficulties which arose on the North-West Frontier in 1897 gave him the opportunity of establishing his reputation. He was in England at the time the troubles occurred, his health having been impaired by years of devotion to duty. The doctors recommended a course of treatment at a German bath. There he had proceeded, when he suddenly received a call to at once return to India and assume the direction of affairs. Like the good soldier he was, he obeyed promptly, and in a few days was on his way to the scene of operations. It was a herculean task he accepted, but General Lockhart was fully equal to it, and within a few weeks of his assumption of command, the chiefs who had taken up arms were unhorsing his carriage, dragging it to the railway station at Rawul Pindi, and promising to do all in their power to maintain order—a promise they loyally fulfilled. Returning to England, a natural anxiety was shown to honour the General who had rendered such a signal service, but General Lockhart refused to be lionised. As he said more than once in reply to urgent appeals for him to attend public banquets: "I appreciate the kind feelings which have prompted your invitation, but I have only done my duty, and I should prefer to recruit my health and return to India quietly." And return he did at the end of 1898 to take over from Sir George White the high office of Commander-in-Chief. Of his fitness for that position there was no question. Only three months ago an officer on his Headquarters Staff wrote in a private letter: "Sir William Lockhart is astonishing everybody by his wonderful grasp of every detail of administration. It is a real pleasure to have to execute his orders, for one feels that in him one is dealing with a thoroughly conscientious, able, and appreciative chief. He is a man in a thousand, for he seems to be master of every fact brought before him. The benefits which will accrue to the Army of India by his enlightened policy will be immense. I only hope that he may be spared to complete the term of his command; his loss would be an irreparable one. He is simply loved by all about him, and his worst enemy, if he has an enemy, which I doubt, could say nothing worse of him than that he is too full of earnest desire to promote the best interests of those acting under his orders, regardless of the enormous strain he is putting on a constitution which has been severely tried by years of indomitable zeal. A better soldier, a truer hearted man I never met. No wonder he is beloved; he deserves to be." This tribute to the gallant and distinguished officer who is now being mourned by all ranks of the Army in India was penned by one who was well qualified to pass judgment on the qualities of a chief with whom he had been brought into the closest bonds of comradeship during many years of trying and difficult campaigning.

Sir William Lockhart had what the Hindoos call the "great gift," and nowhere is it more quickly recognised than in India. During the greater part of his career he had no superior as a commander on the frontier, a reputation which he brilliantly sustained. The enthusiasm with which he inspired native troops was remarkable, and crowned with victory the most harassing North-West campaign of recent years. At the present moment the loss of such a man will be severely felt in India, confronted as it is by famine and the necessity for carrying through a great military measure. Sir William Lockhart, like the greatest of our Indian Empire soldiers, was more than a general; he had the insight and constructive ability of the statesman. No one understood the Pathan character better than he, and no one better appreciated it as a factor in frontier defence. His policy, therefore, aimed rather at making the mountain tribes our willing allies than our conquered subjects. As a leader of native troops he was unsurpassed. Consequently, more than once in the North-West he was able to dispense with the aid of the British soldier. In the carrying out of the scheme of frontier defence reform his experience and prestige would have proved invaluable.

The despatches of Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre on the disasters at Magersfontein and Stormberg are interesting, though melancholy reading. It is only too evident to all who peruse the documents carefully how it came about that the "plans of campaign" failed in both instances. There has been such a disposition shown to blame the unfortunate Generals in command that it is but fair that the question should be asked—Does all the responsibility for failure rest with them? No impartial person could answer in the affirmative. Certainly, so far as Lord Methuen is concerned, he appears to have adopted every possible precaution to ensure success. He was lamentably deficient both in cavalry and guns. He was told that Kimberley had to be relieved, and he was expected to relieve it, if possible, by means of a series of frontal attacks; and Sir William Gatacre was pretty much in the same position. At Aldershot, as we know, cavalry and artillery have not stood for much during the last eighteen years, the idea having been, according to the theories of war as existing in this country, that mounted troops and guns are overrated in value. The Boers were in strong positions both at Magersfontein and Stormberg. Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre, had they possessed a sufficient force of cavalry and horse artillery, might have done what Lord Roberts and General French has been able to do—outflank the enemy. Not having these arms in proper strength—General Gatacre was even in a worse plight than Lord Methuen in this respect—they were compelled by very stress of circumstances to adopt those heroic tactics better described, perhaps, as of the "bull at the gate" order. It may be said that they should not have done anything. What would have been thought of them then? They were to all intents and purposes on the horns of a dilemma. If they had remained idle they would have been accused of want of enterprise. They attempted to drive the enemy from his strongholds in strict accordance with the theories of war which have found favour at Aldershot and Camberley, and their plans missed fire.

The test of generalship was not, however, a fair one. The Boers have been essentially mobile; yet in the earlier stages of our present campaign mobility on our side was a feature conspicuous by its absence. This having been the case, and reliance having been placed entirely on the power of infantry to win victory by means of the frontal attack, it is in the highest degree unjust to condemn the Generals because they did not succeed in accomplishing the impossible. It is to be regretted, of course, that General Gatacre should have entered upon his night march on such faulty information as to the distance, but the General might, we believe, had he desired to defend himself, have had not a little to say on the subject of maps, and the fact of his not having done so is much to his credit. Having now read the despatches with all possible care and attention, and with some knowledge of actual facts, we trust the public will take a more generous view than they have done, leaving it to those in authority to decide, as they alone can, how far the responsibility rests with the Generals, for we feel assured that they, knowing what war is, will be only too ready to make all due allowances for gallant and distinguished officers who, in the earlier stages of a trying campaign, have done their best to secure victory in circumstances of great difficulty. It is now admitted that the capacity of the enemy was underestimated. It would, therefore, be cruelly wrong to cast aspersions on the character of general officers who were called upon to take the field hampered by inadequate materials for bringing about the end that was desired. If cavalry and artillery were not necessary for the accomplishment of our object, how comes it that these arms have been so largely augmented during the last three months? And if they are required now, what must the position of Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre have been at the end of last year, when they were operating with forces of brave infantry only? In view of what has happened lately, the public can afford to be generous. The generals, we are convinced, did their best to secure victory whilst opposed to a stubborn enemy, who had made himself master of the situation, and taken every advantage of his opportunities whilst our reinforcements were being hurried over the seas.

Since our remarks above were penned we have read an article by a German military critic in a Berlin weekly paper, published on Saturday last. The contention of the writer is that the attacks on Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre have been unmanly, seeing that nothing but disaster could have followed upon the operations of generals placed in the position in which they were. The success of the cavalry and Royal Horse Artillery is pointed to as an example of the increased value of these arms. To General French's Cavalry Division, it is held, all the victories of our troops in South Africa are directly due. The relief of Kimberley was effected by forced marches and surprises, General Cronje's capitulation by the blocking of the road to Bloemfontein, and the capture of Bloemfontein itself was due to a wide flanking march. Lady-smith was relieved because General French's victory over Cronje had rendered the Boers' position untenable. The activity shown by French's division is highly interesting, the writer admits, as no examples can be cited from former wars of a similar use of cavalry divisions, which are, in fact, a fairly modern idea. Although it is impossible to measure altogether European needs by the standard of South African conditions, these facts convey, we are told, some notion of the further development of the organisation and duties of cavalry divisions. They have hitherto been used mainly to reconnoitre ahead of the army, protecting the flanks during battle, and pursuing the enemy. In future they will probably have to be provided with additional guns, and utilised for the offensive. This can be best realised by more efficient training in fighting on foot, by increasing the horse artillery, and, perhaps, by employing bodies of mounted riflemen. But if cavalry and horse artillery are to play in future the important part which all military students are prepared now to concede to them, there surely will have to be a complete reversal of policy at our own War Office, and when that comes generals will not be placed in the position that Lord Methuen and Sir William Gatacre were in the middle of last December, when the actions of Magersfontein and Stormberg were fought.

It is to be hoped that, for his own sake, Mr. Rhodes will contradict the statements contained in an interview, published by the Daily Mail a few days ago. It is almost impossible to believe that an Englishman in his position would allow himself to speak with such a total lack of dignity and responsibility. No one has attempted to minimise his services in connection with the defence of Kimberley. Full justice has been done to his practical generosity, energy, and princely schemes for keeping the natives employed, as well as the readiness with which he placed the resources of the De Beers Company at the disposal of the military authorities. His indirect influence on Boer strategy has been admitted over and over again; but as a defender of Kimberley he will never be remembered in history. That honour belongs to Colonel Kekewich, of whom, unless Mr. Ralph reports him falsely, Mr. Rhodes has spoken in the most disparaging terms. It was not statesmanship or even organization that saved the Diamond City from falling into the hands of the Boers, but military skill. That is to say, it could have dispensed with the services of Mr. Rhodes, but not with the services of Colonel Kekewich. The strength of England does not consist in the genius of a few great leaders, but in the character of her population generally. Hence, in her history, with the hour comes the man. The Union Jack floats over the tin roofs of Mafeking as proudly as it floated over the stately edifices of Kimberley, and a personality like Mr. Rhodes is not included among its defenders, nor the machinery of a great mining industry among its resources. The real glory of the Diamond City defence lies in the magnificent work done by its citizen soldiers, and the extraordinary ability with which Colonel Kekewich held his own against the superior artillery of the enemy. It must be remembered that the 15-pounders he begged the Cape Government to send him, only reached De Aar when President Kruger launched his ultimatum. He had, therefore, to fight the heavy Creusot and Krupp guns of the Boers with 7-pounders. That he came out of the contest victorious, is one of the most remarkable feats of arms on record. The big gun constructed by the engineer of the De Beers Company belongs to the later days of the siege, and had little bearing on the fortunes of the defence.

There was an interesting letter from its Lady-smith correspondent in the Standard of Tuesday last. It is a commentary on the precis of special information supplied by the Intelligence Department to Generals at the front, and, owing to the abandonment of the British Camp at Dundee, common property. It proves conclusively that, whatever reasons induced the Government to blunder into war unprepared, ignorance was not one of them. Not only did the best abused Department of the War Office procure fairly accurate information, but it even hinted at the possible course of the campaign. Its statements may have lacked precision, and emphasis, but they would have been suggestive enough to the man in the street; how much more meaning, then, must they have conveyed to the military authorities in Pall Mall? True, it was not expected that the Orange Free State would unite itself with the Transvaal until the outbreak of war, but its ultimate belligerency was never doubted, nor the concentration of a large Boer force in Natal. Nothing could have been nearer the mark than the official estimate of the number of men the enemy could put into the field, 54,239, which, when allowances were made for sickness, caretakers, police, garrison, and border duty, was reduced to 33,000. Intelligence Department assumptions, however, proved incorrect. Johannesburg never needed 5,000 men to guard it, for the simple reason that all its inhabitants were ordered to leave the country on the outbreak of war, nor, with the British bearing the white man's burden in South Africa, was it necessary to defend the Free State border from the Basutos. The number of disloyal Dutch was estimated at 4,000, but then it was never imagined that the borders of British Colonies would be held by the enemy for four months. The information supplied to the War Office with regard to arms and ammunition was remarkably full and accurate, but, unfortunately, the mobility of the Boer guns of position was not foreseen. As a matter of fact they were described as "quite unsuitable for travelling over roads." Yet our troops were familiar with "Long Toms" from Ladysmith to Kimberley. Of the insufficiency of the force with which Sir George White was expected to hold Natal the War Office must clearly have been aware from the first. The mistakes at the beginning of the campaign were evidently political rather than departmental.

It will not be forgotten that at the outbreak of hostilities the Militar-Wochenblatt assumed a very bitter attitude towards this country, and that, being a semi-official organ, its remarks gave rise to some unpleasantness. Now, of all our more important foreign critics, it appears to be the most open-minded, recognising most fully the success we have achieved. It remarks that, the significance of the operations of Lord Roberts and their consequences, can only be understood when their influence upon the other theatres of war, and in Cape Colony, are considered. The districts are far distant from one another, but the blow struck at Cronje bore its effect in every part of the scene of operations. The Wochenblatt remarks that the result arose from the numerical inferiority of the Boers, though in an earlier stage they had known how to make the most of their peculiar situation by a rapid transfer of force from one frontier to another, and our contemporary awards them great praise for the skill with which they operated upon interior lines. But, with the growth of our strength, their division of forces turned against themselves, and they had no reserve of strength upon which to call. The semi-official organ points out that one of the greatest blows inflicted upon the Boers was when Lord Roberts advanced into the Free State and compelled them to withdraw their men from the Orange River, thus depriving them of all the advantages they possessed in stirring up disaffection among the sympathetic farmers in Northern Cape Colony, upon whom they counted so much. The Wochenblatt goes on to enforce the influence of Lord Roberts's operations upon the situation at Ladysmith and the task that lay before "Sir Buller." It is, indeed, rather surprised at the bad fighting which preceded the relief of Ladysmith, for it seems to consider that pressure was being so rapidly reduced that the relief operation would in a few days have been less difficult.

The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung is often unfortunate in its criticising, and we cannot say that it adds much light to military criticism, being indeed too prejudiced against us fully to appreciate any merit whatever in our Generals. It believes that Lord Roberts narrowly escaped a catastrophe, and that it was good fortune only that saved him—that good fortune being the sporadic efforts which the Boers made to relieve Cronje. Prominence is given to the assertion that the Boers got away all their heavy guns from Magersfontein, and the Heeres-Zeitung ends its criticism of operations in that theatre of war by dwelling upon the fact that, with the capitulation of Cronje, we secured only 4,000 men, "and what an apparatus did Lord Roberts employ for this small purpose!" It is impossible, however, even for the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung not to recognise that another chapter of the war has closed, and has closed disastrously for the Boers.

The French papers are a curious subject of study, but their comments must not detain us. The military papers are mostly content to give a record of events by no means accurate—interspersed with laudation of the Boers, sneers at our Generals, and attempts to minimise the fighting qualities of our soldiers, and the importance of our successes. Thus the France Militaire remarks upon our vanity in celebrating the surrender of Cronje, and adds that the honours of "that superb fall belonged to Cronje and not to Lord Roberts, who has no other merit than that of knowing how to employ a crushing numerical superiority to glorify the valiant resistance of a rear-guard of 4,000 men at the most." The France Militaire is, however, glad to seize upon the late Captain de Montmorency, claiming him apparently as a Frenchman, and as "the valiant descendant of an illustrious race." As to the Echo de L'Armée, it continues its tirades, and is greatly agitated at our imagined purpose of capturing Madagascar. It pretends to have information that the French General Staff possesses an official document of English origin, which proves up to the hilt that England was preparing for war when the trouble in South Africa began, and that we contemplated completing the capture of Pretoria by annexing Lorenzo Marques and laying hands upon Madagascar, a design of which, it is needless to say, no one on this side knew anything. The blindness of French organs of opinion is truly astonishing, and we quote this remark merely as an illustration of the extreme gullibility of certain writers on the French Press, whose folly, unfortunately, is not unmingled with a strong spirit of Chauvinism which makes it dangerous.

Colonel A. G. Raper, A.Q.M.G. at Headquarters attained the age of fifty-seven yesterday, and to prevent the loss to the Service of so valuable an officer, he will, we understand, be retained provisionally under Art. 103A Royal Warrant, and remain eligible under Art. 27 for promotion. The arrangements for mobilising the Army Service Corps for service in South Africa reflect the highest possible credit upon Colonel Raper, and point to his being, not only an officer of exceptional ability, but to be possessed of organising power of no ordinary degree. Such an officer could scarcely be spared from the War Office just now. According to the new Army Estimates, the Army Service Corps is to be largely increased, certainly not before such increase was required. With this in view, and the solution of many possible reforms as the result of experience in South Africa, it is highly desirable that the services of Colonel Raper should not be lost. He has every detail of organisation at his fingers' ends, and knows full well what changes are actually needed to place the Supply and Transport Services on a sound basis. The senior officers of the Army Service Corps have long urged that their chief should be raised to the grade of Deputy-Quartermaster-General, and hold the rank of Major-General. With the pending increase in the corps, this demand is naturally strengthened. The opportunity is afforded to pay a graceful compliment to the Army Service Corps, who have done such stupendous work, and with such marvellous results, in South Africa. The raising of the responsible Staff Officer at Headquarters to the status of Deputy Quartermaster-General, with the rank of Major-General, would be highly appreciated, and at the same time fitting reward for Colonel Raper, who has not only done such good work, but possesses the full confidence and respect of the corps he represents. His ability and unflinching courtesy, we hear spoken of on all sides.

When Mr. Wyndham announced in the House of Commons that it had been decided that there should in future be a "separate official and a separate department at the War Office to deal with all matters connected with the Auxiliary Forces," he seemed to infer that this was a new departure. As a matter of fact, it is only a return to the old arrangement which existed prior to August, 1894, when General Sir Francis Grenfell, who succeeded General Sir A. Lyon Fremantle as Deputy-Adjutant-General for Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, in May, 1892, was called upon to take over the duties of Inspector-General of Recruiting also, for purposes of economy. We could have no better evidence of the pettifogging spirit in which our Army has been administered in the past than the determination arrived at in 1894 to unite two offices of such first importance as these. We said at the time the amalgamation was carried out that it would end in disaster, and that the decision would have to be reversed directly a war came. But the policy of the War Office hitherto has been to set itself in opposition to everybody and expect such a proceeding to answer. The whole Service recognised that the amalgamation of the two offices was a huge administrative blunder; but that did not matter so long as the Department gained credit for having reduced the estimates by the salary of one Headquarters official. The interests of the Army, Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers were of secondary consideration. It was not foreseen that the result might be to throw two important offices into chaos directly a strain was put upon them, and send the principal members of their staffs on to the sick list at the moment their services were most urgently required. A more miserable arrangement could scarcely have been imagined. The only wonder is that it should have lasted so long.

A correspondent, "An Irish General," writes:—"In Mr. Winston Churchill's interview with Sir George White, reported in the Morning Post, the General says the only one thing he regrets is Nicholson's Nek. Of course he does. But why? Because of the disaster that befel two of our most famous British battalions. Now Sir George White, knowing the feeling there would be in England at their capture, most nobly at once took all responsibility for their loss on his own shoulders. But had the staff officers who saw them off, and their own leaders, taken every possible precaution for keeping up some sort of communication with Ladysmith, so that their first misfortune in the night could have been made known to the General many hours before they were surrounded and surrendered, he would doubtless have altered his plans for the day, and would have saved them. 'Ireland's worst enemy can scarcely accuse her of being altogether without the fighting quality. Ireland alone amongst the nations of the earth can claim that within her borders it does not take two to draw out the militant in man, for in default of a more sociable party, an Irishman will play "double dummy" with his own shadow rather than let such a festive occasion as St. Patrick's Day pass in the dull monotony of perfect peace.' Since these words of Sir George White's were uttered on St. Patrick's day last year, he and his soldier countrymen have had enough battling with the solid substance of the Boer to satisfy the most bellicose 'bhoys' amongst them, without resorting to the shadow 'diversion' in the future."

The Government proposals for the improvement of the Militia may be summed up thus:—It is proposed (1) to increase the bounty and make the force available without volunteering for service abroad; (2) to train Militia recruits for six months; (3) to replace the present so-called Militia reserve by a real reserve; (4) to provide a complete regimental transport; (5) to offer facilities for officers to improve their professional knowledge and become generally more efficient; (6) to create at headquarters a new Staff Officer to be designated Assistant-Adjutant-General for Militia. All these decisions are to be commended. But Mr. Wyndham, in making the intentions of the Government known, failed to state that the new departures have been recommended for years past by the best-known Militia officers. The Militia owes a deep debt of gratitude to Lord March, Lord Raglan, Lord Selborne, Colonels Davis, Gordon, Hay, Man, Stuart, Stewart, Holden, and Hamilton, not to mention others, who have been foremost in pressing on successive Governments the desirability of placing the constitutional force on a sounder footing, and thereby enabling it to discharge the duties which it was recognised that it would be required to perform if consequences arose. All warnings fall, however, on deaf ears at the War Office. It had become so much the practice to regard the Militia with disfavour that appeals to the common-sense of those in authority appeared only to produce increased opposition. It was not until the War came in South Africa the Government became sensible of its duty to the nation. We have now been brought to realise how great our responsibilities are. Mr. Wyndham's assurances that advantages are to be taken of the opportunity to remodel our military system generally, are consoling, and the scheme he has explained for the bettering of the condition of the Militia is, at first sight, wise and well considered. As yet, however, we have only the outlines of that scheme presented for our judgment; the details have still to be worked out. The success of the official programme must largely depend upon the choice of the officer selected to advise. This being so, it is essential that he should be a strong man; one who knows what the real wants of the Militia are, and who will be satisfied to do his duty without fear and without favour. If such a man is found, good will undoubtedly result. The interests involved are so great that we trust no attempt will be made to fill the new office by a pliable figurehead. An appointment of this kind would bring no satisfaction and no benefit to anybody.

We are authorised to state that the usual programme of reliefs for British troops in India will not be issued up for the present, pending the progress of the war in South Africa, as the home authorities cannot yet settle their programme. The reliefs of native regiments have been prepared in the usual course.

After prolonged discussion the Indian Polo Association has practically adopted the Bangalore Committee's rules in their entirety, with trifling modification. The corner bit has been abolished, and the Hurlingham rules for the penalty for a dangerous foul have been passed, 30 yards from the goal being substituted for the 25 yards' radius. The decision of the goal referee is not to be final, and these can, when in doubt, appeal to the umpires. No player is to strike his pony with the head of his stick. Local committees are empowered to stop or postpone a match when circumstances render this desirable. These are among the principal changes. The new rule comes into force on April 1.

The proposals of Major-General Tyler, Inspector-General of Artillery, for the artillery rearmament in India have been sent home to the Secretary of State.

It has been decided to add to the Headquarters Staff of the Army a Military Transport officer for duty at the Admiralty, the want of such an official having been much felt during the last few months. This officer will be graded as an Assistant-Quartermaster-General, and will draw £800 a year.

THE Secretary for War has approved of the Eton College Volunteer Corps (4th V.B. Oxfordshire L.I.) being increased from four to six companies.

Army Personal.

The Queen visited the Herbert Hospital, Woolwich, on Thursday, to see the sick and wounded soldiers who have returned from South Africa. Her Majesty, who was accompanied by Princess Christian and her daughter, Princess Victoria, travelled by special train from Windsor to Woolwich Arsenal. On arriving at the hospital, the Queen went through the wards, asking each of the patients where he received the wounds or had become invalided. To each man, by direction of the Queen, a bunch of flowers was given. Some of the corridors were lined with soldiers who were recovering. To each of them the Queen addressed a few kindly words. The Royal party left the hospital at a quarter-past five.

The Duke of Connaught has decided to inaugurate his assumption of the duties of his command in Ireland by a tour of inspection, which began on Thursday, when he saw the troops at Belfast and Holywood, under command of Colonel F. J. Graves. The Duke was entertained at luncheon by the citizens. In proposing the health of his Royal Highness, Lord Dufferin referred to the privilege which the Queen had extended to her Irish regiments of wearing the shamrock as homage paid to their noble ardour, valour, and endurance. The Duke of Connaught, in reply, expressed his appreciation of the great gallantry displayed by the Irish regiments. With regard to the Queen's visit, he said it was entirely of her own free will, and with no political object, that Her Majesty was coming among them, and he hoped she would spend at least three weeks in Ireland.

The Commander-in-Chief will preside at the annual meeting of the Militia Rifle Association, to be held at the Royal United Service Institution, on Wednesday next, March 28, at 3.30. Militia officers are invited to attend.

General A. Montgomery-Moore, commanding the troops at Aldershot, will attain the age limit on the 6th prox., but an arrangement has been made by which he will be allowed to retain his command. For this purpose he will be placed on the supernumerary list. Lieut.-General G. D. Barker, C.B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bermuda, becomes a General in succession.

General H. S. Anderson, C.B., I.S.C., will be placed on the retired list on the 1st prox. for non-employment.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston opened the Indian Legislative Council on Wednesday with a speech in which he feelingly referred to the death of General Sir William Lockhart, which was, he said, a severe blow to the country. The late Commander-in-Chief, the Viceroy observed, was no speechmaker. He was essentially a leader of men, and would hold a high place on the roll of Indian captains. India had been deprived of a brave and gallant soldier, a chivalrous and noble-minded gentleman, and a most lovable man.

Lieut.-General Sir George White arrived at Cape Town on Monday from Maritzburg, but in such a reduced state of health that it was decided by his doctors that it was desirable he should return to England at once.

Lieut.-General Sir George White will sail for England by the mail boat leaving on Wednesday next, as will Major Treherne, R.A.M.C., and Captain Lyon, R.A. The other members of Sir George's staff have joined Lord Roberts's. Sir George White is improving in health, and has promised to attend a public function prior to his departure.

Lieut.-General Sir Edwin Markham, K.O.B., will attain the age of sixty-seven on Wednesday next. This in ordinary circumstances is the limit for a General or Lieutenant-General, but Sir Edwin will not be disturbed, as under the terms of his appointment as Governor of the Royal Military College he is allowed to complete four years in his present position before he can be disturbed.

Lieut.-Generals J. H. Hall and G. H. Moncrieff will have passed five years out of employment on the 31st inst., and will be placed on the retired list under the terms of the Royal Warrant. Major-General (local Lieut.-General) Sir G. B. Wolseley, commanding the Madras Army, will become Lieutenant-General to fill one of these vacancies.

It is not quite certain yet who the new Commander-in-Chief in India will be, but everything points to the selection of Lieut.-General Sir Charles Mansfield Clarke, who earned such a high character as an administrator during his two years' command in Madras. Sir Mansfield Clarke dined with the Queen and Royal Family at Windsor on Monday.

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle and the Staff of the 8th Division are due at Cape Town on Wednesday next.

Lieut.-General Sir Robert C. Stewart becomes General, and Major-General W. W. Biscoe, C.B., Lieutenant-General on the Indian Local List, in consequence of the death of General Sir William Lockhart.

Lieut.-General H. M. Nicholson, C.B., I.S.C., will vacate the command of a second class district, Bombay, on the 1st prox. on promotion, on which date Major-General Sir Richard Westmacott will succeed him.

Lieut.-General Sir Henry Colville and Major-General J. M. Babington, Colonel C. W. H. Douglas, A.D.C., Lieut.-Colonel F. H. Hall, and other officers come in for special mention in Lord Methuen's despatch on the Battle of Magersfontein. Lord Methuen writes:—

I have to express my appreciation of the clear orders given out, and the careful arrangements made by Col. Douglas, A.D.C., my Chief Staff Officer, for the attack. Major-Gen. Sir Henry Colville showed coolness and judgment throughout two trying days. The same remark applies to Major-Gen. Babington. I again recognise the business-like manner in which Lieut.-Col. Hall, commanding Royal Artillery, carries out his duties in the field. Major Bannatine Allason performed splendid work, and assisted greatly in checking the enemy on the right of our attack. Lieut. Cuthbert, Scots Guards, my extra aide-de-camp, showed considerable coolness in taking a message from me to the Gordon Highlanders. A volley was fired at him, killing his horse; he took off wallets and saddle and returned, letting me learn from others how he had behaved. Major Milton, commanding Mounted Infantry, behaved gallantly, and was shot three times before he died; he was making a successful effort to rally some men of the Highland Brigade. Lieut.-Col. the Earl of Airlie did excellent work with two dismounted squadrons, when good service was much needed. Major Little, in the firing line, did good work all day. Lieut. Allhusen, 9th Lancers, and Lieut. Macnaghten, 12th Lancers, did good work with their Maxims. Major Maberley, R.H.A., acting galloper to Major-Gen. Babington, after rallying 30 or 40 men of different regiments, was severely wounded. Major O'Donnell, R.A.M.C., and Lieut. Delap, R.A.M.C., were indefatigable in attending wounded under fire. Lieut.-Col. Codrington, officer commanding Coldstream Guards, though wounded, insisted on remaining in command of his battalion till nightfall. Major the Hon. W. Lambton, Coldstream Guards, refused to be carried because the bearers were exposed to fire. He remained on the ground thirty-seven hours without food or water. Capt. the Master of Ruthven, Scots Guards, performed, as on several other occasions, valuable services. Major the Marquis of Winchester was killed whilst displaying almost reckless courage. Sergeant Wilkinson, 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards, showed courage in collecting ammunition. Corporal Bartlett, 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards, under a very heavy fire went 1,000 yards to get a stretcher for Major Milton. Corporal Webb, 2nd Batn. Coldstream Guards, showed great courage in taking messages. The brigade-major, Capt. Ruggles-Brise, and the A.D.C. of Sir H. Colville's staff, again earn honourable mention, not only in delivering orders, but also for their clear and accurate description of the position. Capt. A. Campbell, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, displayed great coolness throughout the day, and helped to dress the wounds of Capt. Gordon under a hot fire. Lance-Corporal Ray, No. 6766, and Private Phipps, No. 3724, specially mentioned by Major-Gen. Babington as having helped him to rally men and taking them into the firing line. Lieutenant Douglas, R.A.M.C., showed great gallantry and devotion, under a very severe fire, in advancing in the open and attending to Captain Gordon, Gordon Highlanders, who was wounded; also attending to Major Robinson and other wounded men under a fearful fire. Corporal Gayner, Black Watch, rallying men, and by his example encouraging his comrades. Private A. Bettington, Cape Mounted Rifles, attached to Cape Medical Corps, and Private Johnson, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, were instrumental in removing a wounded Highlander from the front under a heavy fire.

Major-General Hector Macdonald, C.B., has arrived at Bloemfontein. His wound has now nearly healed.

Colonel Viscount Downe, who went to South Africa as A.D.C. to Lord Roberts, has been selected to command a Brigade of the Imperial Yeomanry, and Lieut. the Hon. R. F. Molyneux, Royal Horse Guards, will act as his aide-de-camp.

Colonel H. Dove, R.E., who was placed on half-pay in December last, retires voluntarily on pension.

Colonel Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox, according to a telegram from Cape Town, has been appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Lord Roberts (unpaid).

Colonel R. E. Allen, late of the East Yorkshire Regiment, who has been A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre since his arrival at the Cape, has been appointed to the command of a Brigade, consisting of the 1st Batn. Royal Scots, 2nd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, 1st Batn. Sherwood Foresters, and 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles.

Colonel G. G. Cunningham, C.B., 1st Batn. Sherwood Foresters, has been appointed A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre, in South Africa, vice Colonel R. E. Allen, selected for a brigade.

The citizens of Kimberley have decided to present Colonel R. G. Kekewich with a sword of honour in recognition of his services during the siege.

Lieut.-Colonel G. G. Chalice, A.S.C., left England on Thursday for duty at St. Helena in connection with the issue of the increased supply of food and stores rendered necessary by the banishment to that island of General Cronje and the Boer prisoners of war. He will be followed immediately by Army Service Corps men and a large quantity of supplies from Woolwich Dockyard.

Major R. Hoare, 4th Hussars, has joined the staff of Lieut.-General Sir George Luck, commanding the Bengal Army, as Assistant Military Secretary.

Lieut.-Colonel E. M. Baker, R.A., has taken up the duties of A.A.G., Dublin District, on appointment.

Major G. A. Porter, retired list, late of the Buffs, is acting as D.A.A.G., Headquarters, Ireland, vice Captain L. A. Stopford, Derbyshire Regiment, employed in a similar capacity at the Horse Guards.

Major H. C. S. Goldfrap, retired list, late Lincolnshire Regiment, is employed as D.A.A.G., Aldershot, as a temporary measurer.

Major H. C. B. Gray, 2nd Batn. Welsh Regiment, has been promoted to the command of the 1st Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, by selection. Promotion has been slow among the Field officers of the Welsh Regiment. Major Gray got his majority as far back as April, 1891. In June next he would have come under the fifty-seven years' rule.

Major J. G. Adamson, retired list, late King's Own Light Infantry, is employed as D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Dublin District, vice Major R. N. R. Reader, Shropshire Light Infantry, in South Africa.

Major F. P. Hutchinson, I.S.C., has been appointed to the command of the 1st Batn. 2nd Goorkhas.

Sir James R. A. Clark, Bart., son of the late Sir Andrew Clark, goes to South Africa as chief executive officer of the Edinburgh and East of Scotland Field Hospital. Sir James Clark was until recently a Surgeon-Major in the Army Medical Staff.

Captain P. S. Grant, R.E., has succeeded Lieutenant A. J. McNeill, Seaforth Highlanders—who has taken the late Captain de Montmorency's place at the head of the Scouts—as A.D.C. to Lieut.-General Sir William Gatacre. It was Captain Grant who so distinguished himself lately in preventing the blowing up of the Bethulie waggon bridge over the Orange river after it had been mined by the Boers.

Lieutenant the Hon. E. C. Gordon-Lennox, 2nd Batn. Scots Guards, accompanies Major-General Barrington Campbell to South Africa as A.D.C.

The Irish Times states that 2nd Lieutenant Popham is an Irishman. Our readers, our contemporaries, must not run away with the idea that because the hero of Bethulie Bridge belonged to the 1st Batn. Derbyshire Regiment he was, therefore, a Derbyshire man. 2nd Lieutenant Robert Stewart Popham is an Irishman pur sang. Son of Mr. Benjamin Popham, of Long Quay, Kinsale, and named after our own Sir Robert Stewart, he was born and bred in Ireland, and educated in Trinity College. Lieutenant Popham passed his military examination just a year ago.

Lieutenant Popham is also claimed by the Irish Times as a Calaisien. He was (says the Temps) born at Calais, and later on attended the "Ecole d'Artillerie a Wolwich." His father is a much-respected manufacturer of tulle at Calais.

Lieutenant H. W. Poyntz, 2nd Batn. Derbyshire Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the 1st Nottinghamshire R.V.O.

ARMY OFFICERS' PAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The air is full of military reforms. The wise civilian will leave them to experts. But there is one reform which is a matter upon which every parent and every schoolmaster may fairly express an opinion. Young officers in the Army cannot live on their pay. The Army is the profession of rich men. The pay of a subaltern is extremely small; barely enough to pay his mess bill. Two things ought to be done for young officers. They should be paid more and their necessary expenses should be made less. No harm, but much good, would be done by enforcing habits of simplicity and thrift. It is hardly fair to urge the objection that the supply of young officers is already greater than the demand. It may be so. But who can count the homes which are straitened by help given out of humble resources to the "soldier boy," who is serving the Queen and is worthy of his hire? The supply may be greater than the demand. Is that a fair reason for underpaying the subaltern? The State is an employer of labour. Why should that be honourable in the State which is mean in an individual?

Harrow School, March 19. JOSEPH WOOD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Just four years ago in your columns under the headline, "An Army as Well as a Navy," I advocated a system of selecting the most efficient Volunteers in the various corps for service with brigades and divisions of the Regular and Militia forces.

The idea was much scouted in certain quarters at the time. Has it not recently been carried out in the formation of the City of London Imperial Volunteers for the war in South Africa? OLD GUARD.

WAR SUMMARY.

Sunday, March 18.

Lord Roberts telegraphed from Kimberley during the afternoon that the Guards Brigade had returned from Norval's Pont, and that many burghers had laid down their arms to Major-Gen. Pole-Carew at Edenburg and other places. Another 9-pounder gun had been handed over to the officer commanding at Colesberg Road Bridge. A Brigade of Cavalry had been dispatched to Thabanchu, half way towards Basutoland to reassure the inhabitants. The proclamation laying down the terms on which burghers will be allowed to return to their homes was being eagerly sought after, and seemed to be thoroughly appreciated. Lord Methuen going northwards from Kimberley, reached Warrenton on the 16th just in time to save the bridge from destruction and secure the position on the Vaal. The regular railway severed between Cape Town and Bloemfontein was being reopened.

Lord Roberts had issued an Army Order to this effect:—

"On February 12 this force crossed the boundary of the Free State; three days later Kimberley was relieved; on the 15th day the bulk of the Boer army under one of its most trusted generals was made prisoner; on the 17th day news came of the relief of Ladysmith; and on March 13, twenty-nine days from the commencement of the operations, the capital of the Free State was occupied. This is a record of which any army would be proud—a record which could not have been achieved except by earnest, well-disciplined men, determined to do their duty, whatever the difficulties and dangers. Exposed to the extreme heat of the day, bivouacking under heavy rain, marching long distances, often on reduced rations, all ranks have displayed an endurance, cheerfulness, and gallantry which is beyond all praise."

Lord Roberts adds that he desires especially to refer to the heroic spirit with which the wounded have borne their suffering. No word nor murmur of complaint has been uttered. The anxiety of all when succour came was that their comrades should be attended to first.

Monday, March 19.

There was an almost complete lack of news. Statistics of the siege of Ladysmith, published by special correspondent of the Standard:—On Nov. 2 the garrison consisted of 572 officers and 12,924 men. On March 1 it had been reduced to 403 officers and 9,761 men. Their patients in hospital on March 1 numbered 1,996, 708 of whom were suffering from enteric fever, 341 from dysentery, and 189 from wounds. Other figures were: Died of wounds, 59; killed in action, 18 officers, 193 men; killed in assaults and sorties, 17 officers and 160 men; killed by the bombardment, two officers and 33 men; wounded in assaults and sorties, 45 officers and 352 men. On Nov. 2 there were 5,309 horses and 4,539 mules. At the end of the siege the horses numbered 2,900, of which only 500 were considered fit for duty; of mules there were 3,713. Their ammunition in November consisted of 566 rounds for 4.7 Naval guns, 1,036 for Naval 12-pounders, 887 for howitzers, and 11,437 for Field Artillery. On March 1 the figures were respectively 42, 252, 102, and 7,200.

Recruiting the Corps of Imperial Bushmen said to be proceeding most satisfactory in Australian Colonies. The numbers on a population basis is fixed thus—New South Wales 722, Victoria 62.6, Queensland 270, South Australia 198, Tasmania 95, Western Australia 89. The Premier of Western Australia has desired, however, that his colony may be allowed to send a full unit of 125.

Tuesday, March 20.

Lord Roberts, in a telegram to the War Office received during afternoon, stated that Lord Kitchener occupied Prieska yesterday without resistance, the rebels laying down their arms, and the Transvaalers escaping across the river; 33 prisoners were taken, as well as 200 stand of arms and a quantity of ammunition and explosives. Lord Roberts added that Mr. Steyn is circulating by despatch riders a notice in reply to his lordship's proclamation, setting forth that any burgher who signs the declaration that he will not fight against us will be treated as a traitor and shot. Lord Roberts reported that the Boers along the Basutoland border were beginning to surrender.

Lord Roberts gave a banquet at Bloemfontein in the evening, at which there were present the commanding officers and the foreign attaches. In proposing the health of the foreign attaches, Lord Roberts complimented them upon the manner in which they had borne the privations necessitated by their arduous march, and in conclusion expressed the hope that he might entertain them next at Pretoria. The Russian Attaché, replying, said he was proud to have had the honour in sharing in so magnificent a march.

Wednesday, March 21.

There was an absence of official news. It transpired that three bridges on the most important lines to Kroonstad had been blown up by the Boers during their retreat. This is regarded as a sign of the intention of the Transvaalers to abandon the defence of the Free States. A corps of young Boers had arrived at Bloemfontein from the surrounding farms and had been detailed, under the command of an Imperial officer, for police work in the neighbourhood, to prevent looting by Kaffirs. Rouxville has been occupied without resistance by the Kaffrarian Rifles, under Major Cumming. Large quantities of rifles, ammunition, and stores were found in the town. The Boer commandment Olivier has retired from Smithfield. The Free State burghers from the southern district are surrendering their arms in considerable numbers. An Imperial Yeomanry Brigade is rapidly concentrating at Kimberley under Lord Chesham's command, the discipline of the men being, it is said, beyond all praise.

Lord Roberts telegraphed to the War Office from Bloemfontein, 4.20 p.m.:—

"So many burghers have expressed their desire to surrender under the terms of the last proclamation that I have sent small columns in various directions to register names and take over arms. A Cavalry Brigade has gone eastwards to Thabanchu. A detachment from Springfontein has occupied Smithfield, where some Transvaalers and a waggon with arms and ammunition were captured. The Scots Guards are at Edenburg and Reddersburg. Clements' Brigade is marching to this, via Philippolis and Fauresmith. Sir George White, who is now at Cape Town, starts for England in a day or two."

Thursday, March 22.

Friday, March 23.

There is no news yet of the relief of Mafeking. The news both from British and Boer sources shows that Snyman, on the 15th inst., leaving a weak force to work the guns and man the trenches round Mafeking, marched up the line to meet Col. Plumer's force. Col. Bodle, reconnoitring, found the enemy at Pitsani, and, falling back, was only in time to prevent his camp, at a siding on the railway, from being surprised. The enemy, moving on, attacked Col. Plumer at Lobatsi. If Snyman fails to turn Col. Plumer's one vulnerable flank, or to beat him back by a frontal attack, Mafeking will be relieved, just as Ladysmith was, by a battle fought at a distance which precluded the besieged garrison from taking part in it.

Philippolis and Fauresmith, which are the two main towns of the route by which Gen. Clements and his brigade are marching to join Lord Roberts, are both places of importance. The first is the village at which the wagon roads from Colesburg and Bethulie join, and Fauresmith is the principal town in the south-west of the Free State.

The rebels in the north-west of the Cape are now between Lord Kitchener and Sir Charles Parsons. The former is at Prieska; the latter is marching north from Carnarvon.

Pomeroy, on the Zululand border road, has been burned by the Boers. The only importance of the news is that it shows that Colonel Bethune is as active to the east of Ladysmith as Lord Dundonald is to the north. Both these leaders of mounted men are feeling the way for the advance, which will be made in Natal as soon as Lord Roberts gives the signal in the Free State.

The Times publishes a telegram from Prieska to the effect that Lord Kitchener and Gen. Settle joined forces at Doornberg Nek on Tuesday. The Boers evacuated the town shortly before the arrival of Lord Kitchener's cavalry on the 19th inst. The enemy are reported to be dispersing, and the rebellion seems crushed. Neither Lord Kitchener nor Gen. Settle encountered any opposition en route. They found the farms deserted.

The Mansion House Fund amounted to-day to £809,000, and the Daily Telegraph Fund to 2,896,817 shillings, £743 13s. having been received yesterday.

MOORLAND SCOTCH WHISKY.—ALTERATION IN PRICE. Owing to the action of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in raising the Duty on Whisky to meet a portion of the required War Expenses, MESSRS. R. B. SMITH & SON (of Perth, N.B.), have thought it better to raise the price of their various marks 6d per gallon or 1s. per dozen, rather than reduce either the age, quality or strength of their whiskies, and they do this in full assurance and expectation that their numerous customers will uphold them in carrying out this alteration. CHURCH OF ENGLAND SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The urgency of our need is my excuse for venturing to ask you to insert this letter in your paper. It is an appeal for money for the Church of England Soldiers' Institute in the Guards' Camp at Pirbright. The facts of the case are as follows:—When Gen. Philip Smith was commanding the Home District he was anxious to have an institute built in the camp for the use of the troops, to be run on the same broad lines as those on which the Institute at Aldershot was being worked so successfully, and begged the committee to undertake the work. The War Department itself selected the site and leased it to the committee. An institute was built and opened by Lord Methuen in 1892. Its success was phenomenal, and its benefit, both to the troops and the neighbourhood, at once became apparent. After two seasons it had to be enlarged to double its original size, and was reopened by H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who has again and again publicly expressed his appreciation of the work it is doing. In 1898 further extensive alterations were made to provide additional accommodation, and only last April a large hall was added. Imagine our dismay at now being told that our buildings interfere very much with the field firing, and that they must be moved. Sir Redvers Buller, in making this decision known to us, regretted the necessity, and very kindly promised to make the move as easy for us as he possibly could. A new site has been given to the committee, but the cost of taking down, moving, and re-erecting the fabric will amount to probably £1,000. The Institute must be taken down, and the committee earnestly appeal to the public for the money required to put it up on the new site. It rests with the public to decide whether the debris of the building should be packed away, thus depriving our brave men on their return home of the advantages the Club and Institute afforded, which they so valued in the past, and which has been the means of doing untold good in the Camp. We feel sure our fellow-countrymen who have done, and are still doing, so much to lessen the hardships of our gallant men will not let so good a work suffer for what is, after all, so small an amount, and no better memorial could be found to commemorate the dead. Contributions will be thankfully received, and reports sent by Col. Llewellyn Wavell, Hon. Sec. Church of England Soldiers' Institute, Aldershot. Contributions will also be received at any of the branches of the London and County Bank.

Lieut.-General, Chairman of the Committee.

NAVY.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, K.C.B., the Commander-in-Chief at Plymouth, died somewhat suddenly on Tuesday, at Naples, whither he had gone on leave of absence. It was only last week that we stated he had sufficiently recovered from his indisposition to warrant an early return to his duties at the western port. The Admiral, who was a son of Col. Sir Henry Fairfax, was born on Jan. 21, 1837, and on Dec. 7, 1850, entered the Navy, seeing service on board the Amphitrite in two voyages to the Arctic. As a Lieutenant of the Ariel, he distinguished himself on the S.E. coast of Africa in the capture of a piratical slaver, and was specially promoted to the rank of Commander on Nov. 4, 1862. As a Captain, in which rank he was made on April 3, 1868, he served as a member of the Foreign Office Committee on the Slave Trade, and in 1872-73 accompanied Sir Bartle Frere as naval attaché on a mission to the Sultan of Zanzibar. Capt. Fairfax next served as private secretary to Mr. Goschen, then the First Lord of the Admiralty, and was then appointed to the command of the Volage, the vessel which conveyed to Kerguelen the astronomical expedition for the observation of the transit of Venus. He remained on the S.E. coast of America as Senior Officer until, in 1877, he returned home to take command of the Britannia, at the time that Prince Albert Victor and Prince George were studying on board her. In 1878 he was made C.B. (civil), F.R.G.S., and A.D.C. to the Queen. On July 11, 1882, when in command of the Monarch, he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, and subsequently was in command of the naval and marine forces which seized and occupied Port Said. For these services he was granted the Egyptian medal, the Khedive's Bronze Star, the Osmanieh of the Third Class, was made a C.B. of the Military Division, and, on leaving Port Said, received, through Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, the thanks of the Egyptian Government "for the manner in which public security and the preservation of order had been maintained." On July 1, 1885, he was promoted to flag rank, and from Feb., 1887, until Sept., 1889, served as Commander-in-Chief on the Australian Station. On Oct. 24, 1889, he became a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, holding office until May, 1892. On June 20, 1891, he was promoted to Vice-Admiral, and was a member of the committee appointed to take evidence and report upon the manning of the Navy. His next appointment was in command of the Channel Squadron, in which he hoisted his flag on May 10, 1892, and hauled it down on May 10, 1894. During this period he twice commanded the "Red" Fleet during the naval manoeuvres. The stranding of one of the ships of the squadron, in the entrance to Ferrol Harbour on Nov. 2, 1892, led to the Admiral being brought to trial by Court-martial on a charge that he had, by negligence or default, hazarded the ships under his command, "whereby Her Majesty's ship Howe was stranded on a rock to the south of the entrance to the harbour." The circumstances were very unusual and created much interest at the time. The Admiral was acquitted, for it was proved that the shoal upon which the Howe struck was not marked in the charts supplied by the Fleet to the Admiralty. On Her Majesty's birthday, May 25, 1896, he was made a K.C.B. On May 10, 1899, he was promoted to Admiral and later in the year was appointed Commander-in-Chief at Plymouth. Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax was a most popular officer, and he will be much regretted by the Service of which he was so distinguished a member. Great sympathy will be felt for Lady Fairfax, who was to have opened a bazaar at Paris this week. He possessed a refinement of manner and address that impressed everyone brought in contact with him, and since he assumed command of the Plymouth Station invariably displayed a genial desire to promote the professional as well as social interests of the western community.

ARMY.

Gen. Sir William Lockhart, G.C.B.—A telegram reached England early on Monday morning from Calcutta announcing that his medical advisers had decided that Gen. Sir William Lockhart's health was so weak that it was inadvisable for him to remain in India. He was, therefore, to leave Calcutta on Tuesday, travel by easy stages to Bombay, and embark to-day for Europe. A telegram arrived later during the morning to the effect that "Gen. Sir William Lockhart, the Commander-in-Chief, died at a quarter-past eleven o'clock last night. His illness suddenly assumed a dangerous form yesterday afternoon, when high fever declared itself. This was the third bad attack of fever within the last six weeks, his strength growing less on each occasion. At night his temperature rose to 108, and the doctors' efforts to reduce it being unavailing, death supervened." Sir William Lockhart was the third son by the first marriage of the Rev. L. Lockhart, of Milton Lockhart—a Scottish laird-parson, descended of an ancient house. All three brothers were in the Service; the eldest, Gen. Lockhart of Milton Lockhart, survives. The second—both were considerably older than Sir William—was Lawrence, the writer and novelist. They were nephews of John Gibson Lockhart, of "The Life of Scott," and "The Quarterly." Born in 1841, Sir William Lockhart joined the Indian Army as Ensign in the 44th Bengal N.I. Oct. 4, 1858, in time to see the close of the Mutiny. His war services may be thus summarised:—Served with the 5th Fusiliers in Oude in December, 1858, and January, 1859; throughout the Bhootan campaign, 1864-66, as Adjutant 14th Bengal Lancers (medal with clasp). As A.D.C. to Brigadier Gen. Merewether commanding Cavalry Brigade in the Abyssinian campaign, and was present at Arogee and the fall of Magdala (mentioned in despatches, medal). As D.A.Q.M.G. 2nd Brigade with Hazara Field Force in the Black Mountain Expedition in 1868 (mentioned in despatches, clasp); in the Dutch war in Acheen in 1875-77, including capture of Lambada (mentioned in despatches, Dutch war medal with clasp); in the Afghan war in 1879-80 as Road Commandant in the Khyber from Sept. to Nov., 1879, and afterwards as A.Q.M.G. to Major-Gen. Roberts's Division, and was present in the operations around Cabul in Dec., 1879, including the investment of Sherpore (mentioned in despatches, C.B., medal with clasp). With the Burmese Expedition in 1886-87 in command of a Brigade (received the thanks of the Government of India, mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., and clasp); with Nuranzai Expeditions (1st and 2nd), 1891, in command of the forces (mentioned and commended in Government despatches, clasp, and promoted Major-General for distinguished service in the field); in the Isazai Expedition, 1892, in command of the forces; with Waziristan Expedition, 1894-95, in command of the forces; (mentioned in Government of India despatch, clasp, K.C.S.I.); in operations on North-West Frontier, 1897-98, in chief command (received the thanks of the Government of India, and even acknowledged by Her Majesty's Government, G.C.B., medal and two clasps). His first staff employment was as D.A.Q.M.G., Bengal, 1869-75. Subsequently he was A.Q.M.G., Bengal, 1875-80; A.Q.M.G., Afghan Campaign, May to September, 1880; D.Q.M.G., Military Intelligence, 1880-85; Special Service work, Chitral Mission, June, 1885, to July, 1886; Brigadier-General, Burma, 1886; Assistant Military Secretary for India Affairs, Horse Guards, 1889-90; Ensign, Oct. 4, 1858; Captain, Dec. 16, 1868; Major, Brigadier-General, Punjab Frontier Force, 1880-92; Major-General Punjab Force 1892-98, Lieutenant-General Punjab 1895-98, and General Commander-in-Chief East Indies, Nov. 4, 1898. The General's commissions bore date—Ensign, Oct. 4, 1858; Lieutenant, June 19, 1859; Captain, Dec. 16, 1868; Major, June 9, 1877; Lieutenant-Colonel, June 6, 1879; Colonel, April 6, 1883; Major-General, for distinguished service in the field, Sept. 1, 1891; Lieutenant-General, April, 1894; and General, Nov. 9, 1896. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon, and was attended by Lady Lockhart, the Viceroy, the members of the Council, and all the high officials. The procession, which included a large number of military officers, was escorted by a field battery, the Viceroy's bodyguard, the Calcutta Light Horse, the 14th Bengal Lancers, the 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, and the Calcutta Volunteers. The coffin was covered with wreaths, including tributes from Lord and Lady Curzon. The route to the cemetery was lined by the 7th and 12th Bengal Infantry, and was thronged by Europeans and natives. The Viceroy and all the civil heads of Government offices met the cortege at the cemetery, where the service was conducted by Dr. Welldon, the Bishop of Calcutta. The Viceroy in Council issued a Gazette extraordinary, in which he referred to the loss sustained by the Army, and said:—

"In a military career of exceptional brilliancy in many parts of the Empire Sir William Lockhart had shown himself to be a brave soldier, an intrepid explorer, and a natural leader of men. Upon the frontier his name was not more widely known than respected, and native soldiers, no less than their British comrades, will mourn in him both a captain of their choice and a personal friend. The Civil Service unites with the military in deploring the death of a great soldier and a distinguished servant of the Crown."

The Queen telegraphed to the Viceroy: "I am deeply grieved to hear the sad news. It will be a great loss. Pray express my sympathy to Lady Lockhart." The Secretary of State for India cabled: "I have heard the news with deep sorrow. The British Army has lost a most distinguished and gallant soldier, a born leader of men. Please convey to Lady Lockhart my deep sympathy and sorrow." Reuter's correspondent wires: "The entire Press of India, English and native, eulogises the late Sir William Lockhart. He was a man who was everywhere loved for his splendid qualities, and nowhere more than among his faithful frontier forces, who would have followed him anywhere."

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Major Vaughan-Lee is in the civil hospital at Kimberley under treatment for enteric fever. He is stated to be doing well. Capt. Rose has been selected for special service in South Africa.

5th Dragoon Guards.—Major Hoare is on passage home from South Africa, in the Maine, invalided.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—The President of the Board of Agriculture has received favourable news from his son, 2nd Lieut. Long, who, after taking part in the relief of Kimberley, was wounded in an action with the Boers outside that town. He was wounded in the left arm, and is likely to come home shortly in order that the limb may have special surgical treatment. He writes, however, from Wynberg Hospital that, all things considered, he is going on well. Lieut. Long is particularly gratified that he "settled" the enemy to whom he owes his wound. The Boer was only 10 yards away when he fired. Lieut. Long, notwithstanding his wound, drew upon him twice with his revolver, missed him at the first shot, but killed him with the second. It may be noted that the young officer only obtained his commission in May last, and he is naturally very proud of having already passed through such thrilling experiences in war.

4th Hussars.—Lieut. Hogg is about to be seconded on appointment as wing officer, Niger Coast Protectorate forces.

9th Lancers.—Mr. MacNeill asked the Under Secretary for War whether any investigation was to be made into the charges against Lord Methuen brought by Col. Gough or any other officer. Col. Gough has been informed that an inquiry will be held into his case, but that it cannot be held while the officers who have to report are at present actively engaged in conducting operations in the field." Mr. MacNeill: "As a matter of fact, is Col. Gough at present at home?" Mr. Wyndham: "I do not know. I do not think that arises out of the question." Lieut. the Hon. D. M. P. Carleton left Cape Town in the Greek invalided for England on the 15th inst. Lieut. Fox is also a passenger in the Greek.

Grenadier Guards.—The date of departure of the 2nd Batn. was again changed at the last moment, and it left Southampton on Saturday instead of Sunday, as had been ordered, in the Dunera for South Africa.

Coldstream Guards.—The will of Major the Marquis of Winchester, of Amport St. Mary's, Hants, who was killed in action at Magersfontein on Dec. 11th last, aged 41 years, has been proved under £377,156 18s. 11d. gross, including personal estate of the net value of £293,721 19s. 10d. Lord Winchester desired that his body should be cremated, and that his funeral should be as simple and inexpensive as possible. He bequeathed to the trustees of the Guards' Industrial Home for the purposes of the institution, £2,000; and in trust for the purchase of a life annuity for the benefit of Col.-Sergt. Walter Dyble, of the Coldstream Guards, £250. Nearly all his servants and many personal friends are remembered, among the latter Sir John Robert Gladstone, Major-Gen. Sir John Carstairs M'Neil, V.C., Col. Reginald Pole-Carew, C.B., who are to receive £1,000 each. The remains of Capt. Benson, who died at Wynberg on Feb. 19th, of dysentery, were interred at Brompton Cemetery on Monday. The first part of the service took place in the Guards' Chapel, Wellington Barracks. The coffin was covered with the Union Jack. The full band of the regiment was present under Mr. J. Regan. The mourners included Col. and Mrs. S. M. Benson (parents), Mr. W. J. Benson, Miss Gladys Benson, Mr. P. Benson, Judge Wightman Wood and Mrs. Wood, the Hon. Armine Wodehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Wingfield, Major-Gen. Cooke, Lieut.-Col. the Hon. J. and Mrs. Pleydell-Bouverie. Among those present were Major-Gen. Trotter, Col. the Hon. H. Corry, Col. Vesey Dawson, Major Hall and Lieut. the Hon. G. A. C. Crichton. The band headed the procession at the cemetery, where a firing party of 100 men under Capt. Case was drawn up. The "Last Post" was sounded by the regimental buglers.

Bufs (3rd).—Reuter's correspondent at Mafeking, telegraphing on March 6, said:—"The engineering operations during the siege have been under Major Vyryan, who was Sir F. Reviews.

THE 95TH IN THE CRIMEA.

The Derbyshire Campaign Series is the title of a set of five volumes, of which the first two are before us. "Lest we Forget" is the motto, and behind the title is a note from a letter of famous old General Pennefather. "Ah! the dear old 95th awakens a thousand thoughts of our glorious old times." It is a fine idea of the committee or the individual directing this set of volumes to devote them individually to the campaigns in which the 95th, now the 2nd battalion of the Derbyshire Regiment has been engaged. Major H. C. Wyly has written the first volume, The 95th (the Derbyshire) Regiment in the Crimea (Swan Sonnenschein and Company) and there is an introduction by Gen. Maurice. The second volume is devoted to the Derbyshires in Central India, and is written by that well-known and popular old 95th man, General Sir Julius Raines, K.C.B., Colonel of the Buffs. Other parts will give particulars of the services of the regiment in Egypt, 1882, Sikkim, 1888, and Tirah, 1897-98, the authors being Major E. A. G. Gosset, Capt. H. A. Iggulden, and Capt. A. K. Slessor. If the succeeding volumes are as good as those now issued, the books are just what they should be; they tell the story of the Crimea and Mutiny briefly, with the 95th always in the foreground. The regiment formed part of Pennefather's Brigade in Sir de Lacy Evans's Division. Of course when the 95th set foot in the Crimea, the transport arrangements were wholly inadequate, and the men had no more than they were able to carry on their persons, the tents, packs, and kit-bags being on board the transports, and the baggage animals left behind at Varna. The 95th played a notable part at the Alma, and the confusion that occurred had a considerable influence in the action. At one time the regiment got divided into two portions and was losing heavily. The 95th indeed were overlapped by the Light Division, and the disturbance of the two brigades had much to do with the perilous movement of the Light Division in broken order across the river. Lord Raglan described the losses of the 95th as "immense;" the casualties amounted in all to 238. The regiment was also engaged in a notable manner at Inkerman in the operations about the Sandbag Battery. For some reason or other Pennefather gave no orders concerning the colours, and those of the 95th were brought on the field, and were a great source of anxiety to those who had charge of them, for there was a constant fear that they would be "rushed." The Guards and the 95th together attacked the Sandbag Battery, drove out the Russians, and there planted their colours. The struggle was furious, and the whole of the 95th, except 100 who remained under Champion, charged exultantly down the Quarry Ravine. It is well known how terribly they suffered, and with what difficulty they got back. On that day the Battery was taken and retaken several times, and the 95th contrived to have a share in every one of the events. The 100 men under Champion also charged down upon the Russians, and drove them off triumphantly, but the achievement bore no fruit. It was an unequal fight for the Second Division, and the 95th covered itself with honour, while Pennefather was inspiring his men with all his energy, and, as Major Wyly says, "the grand old boy's favourite oaths could be heard roaring out from the smoke and mists." The rest of Major Wyly's book is occupied with an account of the siege, and in a series of Appendices we have lists of officers and men who served in the campaign, with a nominal roll of the light company, the names of killed and wounded, and other details adding to the value of the excellent little volume. Sir Julius Raines has done his work equally well. He writes as one who loves the dear old regiment, and the tale of its exploits in 1857, 59 is told in a true soldierly spirit. We shall speak later on of the other volumes that have been published.

SHORT NOTICES.

The Politician's Hand-Book, by H. Whates (Vacher and Sons). Mr. Whate's Review and Digest of State Papers, diplomatic correspondence, reports of Royal Commissions, Select Committees, treaties, &c., was highly approved upon its first appearance. The new volume, devoted to the session of 1900, enhances our opinion of its utility. Mr. Whates makes a principle of reproducing literally parts of documents that are of historical value, and his system of summarising the rest is well carried out. In the political section a vast amount of information is embodied, chiefly concerning foreign policy and events abroad, and including a great deal of matter, for example, concerning the settlement of the Sudan, and the dispute with the Transvaal. The section is a perfect mine of information in regard to public affairs that have been officially noticed during the period covered by the volume, and we heartily commend the book to every writer and Member of Parliament. The commercial section, though less important, is equally good, and will be found of great use by political economists and the mercantile community.

There has long been needed something in the nature of a "Debrett" dealing with the ruling classes of British India, and the Golden Book of India, with an appendix for Ceylon, by Sir Roper Lethbridge, K.C.I.E. (Sampson Low and Company), seems to answer the need, and will doubtless improve with each succeeding issue. A great deal of information has been derived from princes, noblemen, and gentlemen in the Indian Empire, but the work of compilation has been difficult, for India stands alone among civilised nations in possessing no special department, college, or chancery charged with the duty of recording and certifying honours and titles, of regulating their conferment, and controlling hereditary devolution. Sir Roper Lethbridge, than whom no better editor could have been found, remarks that the result has been deplorable, and that the difficulty must soon be faced by the Indian Government. His volume contains a vast amount of information concerning the native nobility and gentry, and will be found of great use in this country, but more by those who are brought into contact with the higher classes of native society.

THE RETURN OF THE POWERFUL.

THE circumstance that Lord Roberts has inspected the Naval Brigade under Captain Bearcroft at Bloemfontein may be an indication that the seamen are to return to their ships as well as an exhibition of the tact and courtesy for which the Field-Marshal commanding in South Africa is noted. The inspection was held on a plain outside the town in the presence of many of the inhabitants of what used to be called the Orange Free State. And it must have been to those present a peculiar and striking illustration of the long reach of Sea power. As the Bluejackets and Marines with their freshly-painted guns paraded in front of Lord Roberts, the representatives of the Empire who compose his force cannot fail to have recognised these seamen as a symbol of that factor which binds the Commonwealth together. After the inspection Lord Roberts, in addressing the men, referred to the excellent work they had done during the campaign, and especially to the opportune arrival of Captain Lambton and the Powerful brigade in the nick of time to secure the defence of Ladysmith. Opportune, indeed, as this was, and useful generally as has been the work of the seamen and Marines, more striking still, to many is the mobility of the heavy guns which were carried across from the Modder River to Bloemfontein. If the naval brigades had done nothing else than this they would have left an indelible mark on the campaign, and, indeed, in all probability, upon military tactics. No longer will military Powers be contented with 12 and 15-pounders as field guns, since British seamen have shown them that even a 100-pounder can be made to accompany the passage of an army. To Captain Scott primarily belongs the credit for having enabled the seamen to accomplish this task, but we are glad to notice that the Admiralty have not forgotten to reward his assistant in working out the details of his carriages. Mr. F. J. Roskrige, one of the engineers of the Terrible, helped in this way, but his health breaking down he has had to return to England, and has now been given an appointment at Woolwich in recognition of his ability.

The return of the Powerful with the naval brigades from Ladysmith and the Modder River is most properly to be made the occasion for a public recognition of the services rendered by Captain Lambton and his shipmates. Although it is not definitely announced that the seamen will be brought to London, it is at least under consideration to have them inspected in the metropolis by the Lords of the Admiralty. It is quite possible, also, that Her Majesty, who is ever ready to show her appreciation of the work performed by her sea service, may follow the precedent set in the case of those who took part in the Benin Expedition. In any case, we may be sure that London will wish to show that it can recognise the value of its sailors, and the exceptional duties they have performed on this occasion. We cannot go as far as the Globe does in suggesting that the Powerful should be brought up the Thames in order that the people of London should see the ship and her guns as well as the men; it will suffice if the men could march through the streets of the capital. At Portsmouth there is to be a public reception, which, as the vessel is expected about April 8, should take place in Easter week or thereabouts. The suggestion is that the men should be marched through the streets to the Town Hall and there entertained, the route being lined by Volunteers, on arrival, while a torchlight procession is proposed on their return to the boats. No plan, however, appears to have been definitely fixed, but at least we may be sure that the demonstration will be really popular and thoroughly spontaneous. It is noteworthy that Lord Roberts, in his address, is reported to have wished good luck to those who were about to rejoin their ship, while he hoped the rest would be present at the entry into Pretoria. We trust that this does not indicate an intention of sending the Bluejackets back and keeping the Marines on shore in the manner which has been suggested, and which, as a writer in the Globe and Laurel states, has stirred up "jealousy between Marines and Blues" which never before existed. We cannot believe that whatever political influence may have been brought to bear upon the authorities at home that Lord Roberts will give his sanction to any such invidious and discontent-breeding scheme.

THE GERMAN NAVAL PROPAGANDA.

IT is scarcely possible to take up a German paper without recognising that the people are at last fully alive to the importance of the fleet, and even those who oppose the Government seem to recognise that they are fighting in a lost cause. Perhaps the most significant point to be noticed is that the German Army—or, at least, many of its officers—has taken up the question, and is advocating the expansion of the fleet as earnestly as the Naval enthusiasts could desire. Baron von der Goltz, the well-known German General and Marshal of the Turkish Army, has lately published in the Deutsche-Rundschau an article upon "Naval Power and Continental War," in which he emphasises the great and growing importance of the fleet to Germany. His chief point is that a blockade of the German coasts would immediately bring about a commercial and industrial crisis. The country can no longer feed itself, and in the period from 1888 to 1897 the necessities of life were imported for nine millions out of forty-three millions of inhabitants. Since that time the population has grown by three millions, and it may be expected to increase until, by the middle of the twentieth century, it will number ninety millions. At the present time the German people draw their food from abroad for eighty-eight days out of the 365, and the demand upon foreign production will grow greater and greater. Therefore, says Baron von der Goltz, the crisis is one of exceptional gravity, for the fleet has been neglected too long, and there is not an instant to be lost, since otherwise Germany will lose her position, and if this should happen the Germans of to-day will be culpable.

The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung adopts a similar line of argument, and boldly sets up England as the future adversary. Germany has become our most powerful rival, and the Berlin organ points to the names of Fashoda and the Transvaal as to the fatal writing upon the wall, adding that we had much less to fear from France or the South African Republic than we may yet have to encounter from Germany. We are weak in the matter of military preparation, according to this critic, and therefore it would be to Germany's advantage to be able to land men upon our shores, though we are credited with having made provision for such an eventuality by strengthening our Channel Squadron, and—which sounds very German—by fortifying our coasts and harbours. The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung will not, therefore, encourage the German Government to attempt an invasion, but points out the fate of Spain as a lesson to be profited by, since the Spaniards lose very much more than it would have cost them to maintain a sufficient fleet.

We shall not follow our German contemporary in its account of the defensive and offensive duties assigned to the German Navy. The geographical conditions of the ports satisfy the Berlin organ that it would be very difficult actually to blockade them, or to interfere with the coastwise commerce, though upon the high seas German merchandise would be seriously imperilled. The writer goes on to say that the country must not expect much from its allies of the Triple Alliance, and remarks that if Germany should be embroiled with Russia or France, she could not expect us to help her. A strong point is made of the fact that according to the weakness of the fleet must be the strength of the troops detailed for the work of coast defence. Therefore, both from the naval and military points of view, is a strong fleet supremely important to Germany, and it depends upon the possession of such a fleet, says our contemporary, whether she shall remain a great Power or sink into the second rank, and if she falls as a World Power, it would not be long before she lost all that three great wars have given her.

Navv Notes.

It is now settled definitely that the Channel Squadron will proceed to Kingstown at the time of the Queen's visit, and will remain there during the time Her Majesty remains in Ireland. Before leaving Berehaven for this purpose, the ships of the squadron by sub-divisions will proceed to Queenstown in order to give leave, and also that an opportunity may be taken on the voyage to exercise at night quarters. The average stay of each pair of battleships will be four days, including the time of passage. The ships are also to go to Bantry for rifle exercise at the ranges and for torpedo practice. No statement has as yet been issued in connection with the movements of the squadron on leaving Kingstown, but our correspondents consider that it is highly unlikely that the Mediterranean trip will be made as originally proposed.

On Wednesday next a meeting is to be held by the Navy League in the Queen's Hall "to protest against the statement by the First Lord of the Admiralty that the resources of the country are unequal to further increase of Naval defence."

Whether a resolution to this effect is to be proposed is not clear from the public announcement by the League, but it is at least doubtful whether Mr. Goschen would admit that he said that "the resources of the country are unequal to further increase of Naval defence." As it stands there cannot, we imagine, be any question as to the possibility of enlarging the programme of Naval construction, provided that the Admiralty be willing to agree to terms. Herein lies the crux of the situation. Is the emergency so urgent as to necessitate heroic measures? At the present moment there is plenty of work of all kinds for such firms as are on the Admiralty list of contractors. Doubtless it is true that at a price and on certain terms the Clydebank Works, now owned by Sir John Brown and Co., as well as Palmer's at Jarrow, and Armstrong's at Elswick, have slips on which could be constructed more battleships, while several smaller firms could undertake cruisers. Seeing, however, that there are so many vessels in various stages of construction, it is at least a matter for serious consideration whether any real benefit to the State would result from taking advantage of the fact to lay down more vessels. What we understand Mr. Goschen to mean is that he cannot get the vessels already begun finished, because he has to wait for armour and machinery; and this although the production of the former article has already been doubled. It would seem, therefore, that the efforts of the Navy League would be better directed towards forwarding the completion of ships already in hand than in forcing the Government to commence the construction of more ships.

The Parliamentary paper which has been issued containing correspondence concerning the seizure in East African waters of certain German ships has considerable interest for Naval men. Its contents must have a certain bearing upon their conduct in any circumstance of a similar nature which may hereafter arise. It will also necessitate, we should imagine, a revision of the "Manual of Naval Prize Law," a work issued under the authority of the Admiralty and quoted in support of the German case. Lord Salisbury says of this manual that it is neither an exhaustive nor authoritative statement of the views of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, but merely consists of directions sufficient for practical purposes in the case of past wars, but inapplicable to a war with an inland State whose only communication with the sea is over a few miles of railway to a neutral port. Lord Salisbury, in referring to the detention and search of the General, remarks that until the detailed reports are received the Government "cannot decide whether the British Naval officers in any respect exceeded the right of search accorded by international practice to belligerents." It was in regard to this ship that Count Hatzfeld adopted a language and tone which Lord Salisbury referred to as "very unusual in diplomatic correspondence," and to which he made the following reply:—"I received with some surprise a communication from the representative of a Power with whom Her Majesty's Government believe themselves to be on the most friendly terms—worded in so abrupt a manner, and couched in language which imputed to Her Majesty's Naval commanders that they had shown a disrespect to international law, and placed unnecessary impediments in the way of neutral commerce. There is no foundation for these imputations." It would appear that the remark of Sir Edward Chichester to Admiral Dewey, "You see, sir, the Germans have got no sea manners," might really be given a wider application.

The mishap which occurred on board the Conqueror on Tuesday, and which resulted in injuries to three men, appears to have been somewhat exaggerated. The vessel which acts as tender to the gunnery ship Devonport was outside the breakwater for practice with a seven-pounder gun, when a premature explosion of one of the charges occurred, injuring the men. Two were severely wounded about the arm and hand, while the third was considerably cut and burnt. A surgeon is always on board these ships when they go out for practice, and his services being available on this occasion, the men's injuries received prompt attention. The reason for the charge exploding is not clear, but it is conjectured that, although the gun had been sponged, some fire was still left in the bore.

An interesting account of the Battle of Graspán, with a sketch, is supplied to the Globe and Laurel by Lieutenant Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded in the action. He mentions the curious circumstance that the first three Marines who were wounded were hit by our own shrapnel bullets, a shell having burst prematurely. With reference to the alleged "bunching" of the Brigade he says, "In places the line seemed to be a bit crowded, but from what I could see the accurate extension was four paces." He also remarks, "There was something very fine about the men; they did not want leading in the rushes, but only wanted someone to give them the tip as to whether it was time to get on: if you did get up a bit before time then all seemed to follow like clockwork—there was no hesitation with them. They drilled beautifully, and this was their nature, as there was no cover; so when the line was halted to fire you could distinctly see that wave of men closing up into line, and so keeping the line firm." In reference to another matter there are a few sentences which we commend to the attention of Sir John Colomb.

"The Naval Brigade all through had behaved well, both Blues and Marines, and stokers (stretcher men), and it was with great regret that we afterwards read in the papers letters touching on and stirring up jealousy between Marines and Blues which never existed. The first accounts of Enslin gave very little mention of the Marines, using the word Naval Brigade, which the newspaper correspondents and general public naturally take to mean Bluejackets; thus full credit of the victory was not given to us. Then came the casualty lists, which speak for themselves, and it was gradually understood that the Marines of the Naval Brigade had borne the brunt of the fighting, but not before several letters had been written in the papers, some of which were not in good taste, and which tended to arouse a spirit of jealousy which happily did not exist with us. Do not Marines and Bluejackets, making up a Naval Brigade, belong to one and the same Service? Anyhow, in the small Naval Brigade with Lord Methuen we had all the tactical and disciplinary command we required. Is it not a thousand pities that petty differences should be brought forward and haggled over by people who, too often, do not grasp the situation accurately, and which might with advantage be left till after the one main object, the defeat of the enemy, has been achieved?"

This is better advice than that contained in quotations from dead men's letters about "old naval games" and "bossing the show," or misleading comparisons between the capabilities for command of naval and marine officers.

The statistical report of the health of the Navy for 1898 has just been issued. The returns for the total force serving afloat show that the aggregate number of cases of disease and injury recorded for the year furnishes a ratio of 906.09 per 1,000. This is an increase of 11.28 per 1,000 on that of 1897, but a decrease of 60.04 per 1,000 when compared with the average of the previous ten years. The death-rate, 4.91 per 1,000, was the lowest since 1856, when the reports in their present form were first prepared. There were eight cases of plague, affecting seven persons, and of these four proved fatal. They all occurred on the East Indies and China Stations, although three cases with one death appear in the returns of the irregular force. The average number of men sick daily was 3,176.65, or 38.35 per 1,000. The lowest sick rate was on the North America and West Indies Station, and the highest on the East Indies Station.

Replying recently to criticisms on the weakness of the Royal Naval Reserve, Mr. Goschen laid much stress upon the ability of the Admiralty to utilise the services of all naval and marine pensioners below the age of fifty-five. Whilst it is desirable to retain this power of increasing the Reserves in an emergency, it must be perfectly obvious that elderly men, verging upon fifty, are far too old in most cases to be effectively employed in sea-going vessels in time of war. There are some duties in the ports, coast guard stations, and the like which they may be capable of performing, and thereby releasing a number of younger men for sea service; but we should be sorry to trust to elderly men to fight the guns of modern battleships and cruisers. The pensioner reserve, which consists of 4,500 seamen and only half that number of Marines, must be assumed to include all, or nearly all our thoroughly able-bodied pensioners. The proposed formation of another small reserve from the seamen and Marines who quit the service at the end of their first engagement does not appear to have made much progress.

When the Europa leaves, Chief Inspector of Machinery J. A. Bedbrook, now specially employed at the Admiralty, will proceed as far as Port Said, and may go on to Point de Galle. His purpose is to overlook the water-tube boilers of that cruiser while on passage, and endeavour to effect more economical working of this pet aversion of the hon. member for Gateshead. Considering that the Europa's skeleton engine-room staff is merely supplemented by men for passage to Australia, many of whom have but slight experience of stoking in such a large vessel at sea, economy of fuel can hardly be expected. If it cannot be effected in properly manned warships, it is not likely to be attained only with a "scratch" crew. Probably Mr. Bedbrook's ability and long experience may evolve some measure that will appease the official mind, now somewhat exercised at the enormous consumption of fuel.

The Government is being pressed to appoint a committee to inquire into the probable duration of the Welsh coal, as it is doubted by some mining engineers whether the wholesale export of a coal so valuable to the Navy can be continued indefinitely. The question is, of course, of the first importance, for although it does not seem probable that the Welsh mines could be exhausted within the next fifty years, still it may be desirable, and even necessary, to put some check upon its export. The Admiralty confessed themselves hampered by the strike of miners two years ago, and the same difficulty may easily recur unless the reserves of coal in the home dockyards and coaling stations are materially increased. It is true the Admiralty make their contracts with the coal dealers for long periods, and the dealers are theoretically bound to continue the supplies at contract price. Yet in practice there might be great difficulty in enforcing the contracts during a prolonged strike, and if so this would lead to serious embarrassment in peace and to actual danger in war. Enormous as is our annual output from the mines, it is well known that neither coal merchants nor miners find it lucrative to overstock the market. The demand regulates the supply, and in the case of an obstinate strike the high prices charged are not wholly artificial. In the last extremity the Admiralty would, perhaps, be empowered to purchase their own mines and work them; but any such scheme would involve complicated organisation such as could hardly be set going by a public department on the eve of war. Any attempt to limit the export of British coal would no doubt be resented by the colliery owners and the trade in general as a restriction upon our cherished Free Trade principles; yet, if we are within measurable distance of exhausting smokeless coal, the Government would surely be justified in checking the export. Failing other means of so doing, why should not some of the Welsh coal mines be purchased by the Government?

A kindly appreciation of Admiral Rodney Lloyd appears in the Malta Chronicle on the occasion of his being succeeded in the post of Superintendent of the dockyard at that place by Admiral Burgess Watson. Our contemporary remarks that:—"It is needless to say that the departure of the gallant officer will be deeply regretted by all. The wonderful changes in the dockyard since he took charge must have been apparent to every one. There has been one steady wave of improvement in all the different branches under an ever-increasing pressure of work, and it has fallen to the lot of no previous Admiral Superintendent to have done so much towards the public service and the public good. A firm ruler—but kind and considerate to all alike—Admiral Lloyd leaves the Island with the very best wishes of the whole community for the future welfare of his family and himself."

The Treasury has fixed for quarter commencing April 1, 1900, the rate for the issue of the dollar at Hong Kong, in the Straits Settlement, and in the China Station at 1s. 11d. This rate is fixed for regulation payments, which would be made in sterling in the United Kingdom.

Navy Personal.

Admiral Edward Field, M.P., responded to the toast of the Navy last week, at the fortieth annual dinner of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, held at the Hotel Metropole, and spoke very strongly on the help given by the Associated Chambers in recognising the needs of the Navy. The gallant Admiral, who, we are sorry to say, gave himself credit for being only an extinguished officer, must have had in mind a general meeting convened some years ago by the Lord Mayor, when the voices of those interested in the prosperity of the Empire were raised in no uncertain sound to support the Naval Defence Act.

Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald, who died on December 15 last, left estate valued at £3,021.

Vice-Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, Commanding the Channel Fleet, is to leave Bantry on the 31st inst. with the vessels under his orders, for Kingstown, and await the arrival of Her Majesty, about the 3rd prox., remaining there during the Queen's stay in Ireland.

Rear-Admiral A. L. Douglas, Second Naval Lord of the Admiralty, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty at Windsor Castle on Monday last.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, of the Mediterranean Fleet, one of Erin's bravest sons, entertained at dinner on Saturday last at Malta upwards of four hundred Naval and Military officials, also the officers of the Imperial Japanese warship then at that port. His lordship explained that in taking this opportunity of celebrating St. Patrick's Day he also took advantage of the occasion to commemorate Her Majesty's gracious permission to her troops to wear the shamrock, as well as to recognise the daring and gallantry of the Irish troops in South Africa.

Captain H.S.H. Prince Louis of Battenberg, Assistant Director of Naval Intelligence, has been granted the use of Frogmore House, near Windsor Castle, by Her Majesty as a temporary residence.

Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, left Simon's Town for Portsmouth on the 15th inst. His last remarks on his departure from the Cape were that "the successful defence of Ladysmith was attributable to Lieut.-General Sir George White and the Colonial Forces, especially the Light Horse." As no information of the proceedings of the gallant Captain and his brave followers of the Naval Brigade has been afforded to the public, the account of how they helped to defend Ladysmith for nearly five months will be eagerly looked for when they reach their home-port.

Captain Fritz Hauch Crowe should have been mentioned in our last issue as British Consul-General, and not Consul, for the Portuguese possessions in East Africa, to reside at Lorenzo Marques.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, left the Cape on Tuesday last for China, after five months' stay, during which he has displayed marked ability as an artilleryman, and effected invaluable aid to the forces at the front. Captain Sir William Peel, of the Shannon's naval brigade in India, in transporting his 8in. 65cwt. guns to Lucknow, showed the world the ability of the Navy at that period of grave emergency. Captain Scott has followed the path of his great and gallant predecessor, and given another proof that the nation may rely on the officers and men of its fleet. The correspondent of a daily contemporary states that one of the naval brigades in South Africa, with their 4.7in. guns, covered sixty-four miles in seventy-two hours. Such a feat is unrivalled in Military history.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, had the misfortune, on Sunday evening last, while proceeding on board his ship alongside Portsmouth Dockyard, to fall from the prow, or gangway communication, to the staging between the vessel and the boundary wall, a drop of 14ft. to the crosspiece of the stage, against which he struck his head, and then fell to the bottom of the floating stage. It was found on taking him on board the cruiser that his right leg was fractured, and he remained unconscious throughout the night. He was removed to Haslar Hospital the next morning, and although suffering from the shock and concussion entailed by the fall, has since showed signs of improvement.

Captain H. C. Reynolds, of the Pique, whose departure for China was delayed by the cruiser under his command being struck by a passing steamer in Plymouth Sound, left Devonport on Friday in last week to relieve the Iphigenia.

Captain Gerald C. Langley, of the Nile, has been awarded the good service pension, vacant by the promotion to flag rank of Captain H. T. Grenfell, and obtains it in the ordinary course of seniority. He has seen considerable service, and was for three years Naval Attaché at Washington.

Captain G. F. King-Hall's appointment as Chief of the Staff, and Captain the Hon. H. Tyrwhitt's as Flag Captain to Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher, are events that have been deferred too long in the interests of the Service. It was understood that Captain Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, was to be given the principal post on the Staff of the Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean. But if affairs in South Africa required his presence there was no reason why the officer commanding the largest fleet in the world should, even for a short period, be left without a Chief Staff Officer, when every one has seen the necessity, both prior and subsequent to the loss of the ill-fated Victoria, for the Admiral or Vice-Admiral having a recognised deputy at his elbow. As effect has now been given to the recommendation of 1893, there should be no falling back to the double-barrelled position of Chief-of-the-Staff and Flag-Captain that has obtained up to the present period, and was incompatible with the dignity of the more important of the two appointments.

Captain Sir Richard Poore, Bart., does not relieve Captain, now Rear-Admiral, H. T. Grenfell at the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, until the expiration of Sir Richard's leave on full pay.

Captain A. J. Horsley relinquished his studies at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, on Monday last, and joined the Europa at Devonport on Wednesday evening, in place of Captain A. J. Pocklington, leaving for Australia on the following morning.

Captain Alvin C. Corry, of the Hood, left Gibraltar on Saturday last for Portsmouth to pay off that battleship.

Captain F. J. Foley, of the Pactolus, who replaces Captain Jarvis Wintz in the Furious, was entertained last week by the officers of the Pactolus at a farewell dinner.

Commander R. Bouchier S. Wrey, of the Brisk, succeeds to a baronetcy by the death of his father, the tenth baronet, of Tavistock Court, North Devon. Sir Robert wears the Zulu war medal and clasp, 1879; Egyptian war medal, 1882; and the India-Burma war medal and clasp, 1885-7.

Commander Claud A. W. Hamilton commissioned the Rosario on Tuesday last at Sheerness to relieve the Rattler in China. He has had large experience of that station, and now commands a sloop well adapted to the Naval requirements of that class of vessel in the Far East.

Commander the Hon. Seymour Fortescue, Naval A.D.C. to Field Marshal Lord Roberts, V.C., hoisted the Union Jack at the recent occupation of Bloemfontein. The flag, of silk, was made by Lady Roberts, and contained a four-leaved shamrock in one of its corners.

Commander T. B. Triggs, who voluntarily retired on the 6th inst., has been appointed superintendent of the Marine Society's ship Warspite at Woolwich by the Governor of that association. Lieutenant H. T. A. Bosanquet (retired), who has recently been connected with the society, is now attached to the secretariat.

Lieut.-Commander H. F. Shakespear, of the Dwarf, has been awarded the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society for jumping overboard at the mouth of the Limpopo River, East Africa, and attempting to save a seaman who had fallen into the water from that vessel.

Lieutenant M. H. Hodges, of the Powerful, and late of the Naval Brigade, appears to have been left at R.N. Hospital, Simon's Town. Lieutenant R. F. White, Surgeon C. Marsh-Beadnell, and Midshipmen G. E. Lewin and T. C. Armstrong, of that cruiser, are still at the front in South Africa.

Deputy-Inspector-General H. C. Woods, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, was relieved in medical attendance at Windsor Castle by Sir James Reid on Saturday last, and returned to duty at Portsmouth.

Staff-Paymaster F. W. J. Airey arrived at Plymouth on Friday in last week from the Minerva at Gibraltar by the P. and O. steamship Arabia, to join the Goliath when commissioned on Tuesday next.

Colonel W. S. Wright, R.M.L.I., Supernumerary Commandant, and Assistant-Adjutant-General, Royal Marine Forces, obtains promotion by the compulsory retirement of Major-General John Cairncross, R.M.L.I., who attained the age of sixty-five on the 14th inst. Unfortunately, there is, in the present conditions of the service, no prospect of employment for Colonel Wright as a General officer.

Colonel W. T. Adair, R.M.L.I., p.s.c., on special service in South Africa, is mentioned as his successor at the Admiralty, but, although a most valuable and efficient officer, it would be as unfair to confer the appointment on him, as to have replaced General Sir Henry Tuson by Lieut.-General Arthur French when the Deputy-Adjutant-General's post fell vacant.

Colonel W. G. Tucker, Commandant R.M.A., the youngest officer of his rank in the Royal Marine Forces, obtains the good service pension, vacant by the promotion of Colonel W. S. Wright. Colonel Tucker, while Captain and Brevet-Major, was given substantive rank in the latter grade as a special recognition of his services at El Teb and Tamai. On Saturday last the gallant Colonel gave shamrocks to those under his command at Eastney, and asked them to remember Field-Marshal Lord Roberts and his brave followers in South Africa.

Rev. Samuel Shone, LL.D., Chaplain, Portsmouth Division R.M.L.I., succeeds Rev. William Law at Portsmouth Dockyard. This is the second home-yard that Dr. Shone has been fortunate enough to obtain, having served at Devonport from 1888-92, and has held his present appointment since 1895.

Major A. Paris, R.M.A., p.s.c., Naval Intelligence Department, has been allowed to join the staff of Major-General Sir Frederick Carrington's force for service in South Africa, but did not accompany that distinguished officer on Saturday last in the Cunard steamship Aurania, having remained behind with other artillerymen to bring on the field guns. Major Paris has qualified as interpreter in German. Major W. S. Drury, R.M.L.I., whose professional as well as literary ability are well known, takes Major Paris's place at the Admiralty.

Captain R. J. Saumarez, R.M.L.I., has embarked in the Rodney to relieve Captain F. H. Morres, R.M.L.I., who will act as D.A.A.G. of the Royal Marine Forces, in place of Major J. H. Bor, R.M.A. The latter performs A.A.G.'s duties until Colonel W. P. Wright's successor is appointed.

Messrs. Lamley and Co., Exhibition Road, S.W., are publishing in booklet form Mr. Harold Begbie's verses on the service rendered by the Naval Brigade during the defence of Ladysmith, with original drawings by Mr. Caton Woodville and Mr. Everard Hopkins. The proceeds are for the benefit of sailors and soldiers disabled in South Africa. Copies can be obtained from the publishers and all booksellers at 6d. each.

CANTEEN AND MESS CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, Ltd., 23, Regency Street, Westminster.—This Society is a union of Cantens and Messes formed for mutual benefit of the Services at home and abroad. It supplies every canteen or mess requisite.

Navy Foreign.

Orders have been issued that upon the French Mediterranean squadron returning to Toulon one division shall be dispatched to take in coal at Marseilles. The Gaulois and Charlemagne recently proceeding from Brest to the Mediterranean, coaled at that port, where it is intended to increase the Naval establishment and form a large coaling and victualling station. A rear-admiral is now in command there, and the Naval establishments are growing in importance. The purpose is to relieve the pressure upon the port of Toulon by enabling Marseilles to take a part in supplying the fleet. A special intention is to create at the port a special establishment for the dispatch of Naval stores to the dockyard at Saigon and for the division on the China station. The Naval Prefect at Toulon has been instructed to investigate the matter and to lay a report upon the subject before the Minister of Marine, embodying full details and a definite scheme for the work to be done at the place. The staff at Marseilles will have to be increased, and new magazines and storehouses will be built. Opinions are rather divided upon the wisdom of this step, which will probably involve increased expenditure, though there will be some advantage in facilitating the work at Toulon.

Orders have been received at that port to give effect to the decision to strike off from the list of effective vessels the old Colbert, Trident, and Richelieu, in the construction of which wood has been used. It may be remembered that the Minister explained to the Chamber the reasons for having retained these vessels upon the list so long. He said that their purpose in case of hostilities was to lie within the moles at Bizerta and to take part in the defence of that place, which at the time had no proper forts. It appears that Captain Merleaux-Ponty, commandant at the port, asked the Ministry that these vessels should be so employed. Now, however, the necessity for retaining them in the service has disappeared.

The Novoe Vremya has lately published some details of experiments with wireless telegraphy, which have taken place at the island of Hogland. The point chosen was so situated that it was not masked by any other land in the direction of Kotke at a distance of twenty-three miles, where the second station was established. The height upon which the apparatus was established was about eighty feet above the level of the sea, and the mechanism was connected with a transmitter and receiver at the top of a high mast. The trials appear to have been moderately successful, though the Novoe Vremya states that at one time the messages transmitted from Hogland could not be deciphered at Kotke, while on the other hand Kotke could talk without any difficulty to the station at Hogland.

There is something like a crisis in regard to the engineering branch in the French Navy. The officers are aggrieved and not yet in sufficient numbers for the needs of mobilisation, and the various engine-room ratings never continue longer in the service than their obligation enforces, so that the staffs are reduced to an alarming degree. The difficult question of the status of the engineer officer has also become acute. The engineering staff consists of one engineer as inspector general, six engineer inspectors, twenty chief engineers, 100 engineers, and 200 assistant engineers. The Masséna alone has four engineer officers and five are required for cruisers like the Guichen, and four for those like the Cécille. In short the engineers' list is insufficient and the officers are hard-worked, while their chances of promotion are restricted. They enter the Navy with high hopes, but are quickly disappointed, and they do not receive that consideration on board which they consider due to their responsible position. Some of these facts are cited in the Moniteur de la Flotte. There are two camps in the Navy and outside in regard to the position of the engineer. "An Admiral cannot become an engineer, but an engineer may become an Admiral," says M. Charles Allard, deputy for the Var. And thus speaks M. Claveau in the Figaro: "Why do you not ask an Admiral to be a shoemaker and repair the seamen's boots? Do you reproach an engineer because he is not a mason? If Nelson came to life again and commanded a British squadron he would not despise machinery, but he would say to his engineers, 'Go ahead!' and it would be he and not they who would win the battle of Trafalgar."

NAVAL DESPATCHES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of March 10 you commented on the non-publication of despatches on the actions of Maersfontein and Stormberg, and in your following number those despatches are published. May I ask why you make no comment on the non-publication of the naval despatches of the Brigade which accompanied Lord Methuen's column, and which so distinguished itself at Graspan? A question was asked in the House on this subject, but the reply was eminently unsatisfactory. Surely, considering the time that has elapsed, they should be published without further delay. Capt. the Hon. H. Lambton and Percy Scott have been made Companions of the Bath, and I am much mistaken if it is not the almost universal feeling of the British public that their eminent services with the Naval Brigades on the Natal side have not been adequately rewarded. But what about Capt. Prothero and his conspicuous bravery in leading his men until he was wounded? What about poor Commr. Ethelston, the dearly beloved of all his comrades. The Powerful? What of Major Plumbé, and all the other officers and men of the Brigade? Not even "mentioned" in despatches as far as the British public know.

March 17.

UBIQUE.

Messrs. Norman and Stacey, Limited, have contrived a plan by which all their customers who have gone to the seat of war are relieved from any further payments for goods supplied by them until returning to England, when the original arrangement will be resumed. Further, Messrs. Norman and Stacey undertake to give a receipt in full discharge to the next-of-kin of those killed or dying of wounds received on active service, and the receipt will be accompanied by a cheque for all payments made to date.

The Guards' camp at Pirbright is to open for the musketry season next Wednesday, the 28th inst. The first parties of recruits from the Coldstream Guards will go to the camp on Saturday, March 31.

THE DISABLED SOLDIER.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

A set of six homes, accommodating one hundred disabled soldiers, and equipped with everything that modern requirements demand, are being erected at Bisley under a scheme formulated by Mr. Edwin O. Sachs, the architect, whose name is frequently associated with the organisation of economic institutions. His idea was that the builders, the builders' merchants, and their workmen, would readily combine to put up a block of buildings which would form the nucleus of a permanent miniature "Chelsea," and he has not been disappointed, seeing that in the six short weeks in which the scheme was mooted, materials and cheques to the value of £14,000 have been brought together out of a total of £25,000 required. Perhaps the most interesting feature is the enthusiasm of the workmen who are contributing towards paying for the labour necessary in putting the materials collected together. One well-known firm sent a cheque for £80, representing the contributions of over 2,000 workmen, and similar cheques, large and small, come in from all sides.

Frequently, the workmen prefer to organise some entertainment rather than to give their pence direct, and we thus find the United Trades Unions of a town like Leicester organising a concert with sixpenny and shilling seats this week, and bringing up a total of nearly £200 towards the fund. On the other hand, we must not forget that some of the donors of materials have really contributed royally; thus, there is one donation of 750,000 bricks, which would mean £1,500, and another by a well-known furnishing firm of the whole of the furniture for one home; whilst half a dozen other firms combine to do the entire roofing; and each of the great sanitary firms are attending to the sanitation for one of the homes.

The site of the homes is at Bisley, the land having been presented by Lord Pirbright in connection with the Princess Christian Homes scheme, and the buildings, which have been picturesquely designed by Mr. Sachs on the bungalow principle, are grouped in a semi-circle, in the centre of which stands a recreation house. This contains a large mutual hall, workshops, class-rooms, and everything else that would go towards making an old soldier's life happy. The homes themselves, six in number, each accommodate sixteen men, and each pair of homes has a mutual service block.

H.R.H. the Princess Christian has now also made an appeal for the maintenance of these homes, and the first response, it is interesting to see, comes from Drury Lane Theatre, where an interesting matinée is to take place, under patronage of the Royal Family on May 15, the Ladies' Committee in charge having Lady Edward Spencer Churchill as Chairwoman, and Miss Amy Bence as Honorary Secretary. The Duchess of Bedford, the Duchess of Northumberland, and the Duchess of Marlborough are on this committee. It is the money from this special matinée that is going to ensure the proper up-keep of the buildings so generously given by the building trades, and which will serve as a monument to the gallant deeds done by Tommy Atkins in the Transvaal war.

What is Lazenby's Sauce?

It is the genuine Harvey's Sauce, an appetising sauce of delicious flavour and peculiar mellowness, the original recipe of which passed about one hundred years ago into the possession of Elizabeth Lazenby. This Sauce is still manufactured by her lineal descendants, and is now known as this distinctive name having been adopted as a protection against worthless imitations.

FIELD GLASSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

THE UNITED SERVICE GAZETTE, Jan. 27, 1900, says on The Question of Field Glasses.—It is unquestionable that a very large number of the bulky and heavy Field Glasses which are being so generously purchased for our volunteers, and which have to be carried across the shoulders or at the belt, will never see the front at all. If not discarded at Cape Town, very few will get further than the chief depots. It is astonishing how deceptive the weight is. Have the glass weighed before you buy it, and you will often find that one which you would estimate at half a pound weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and the hard leather case 50 per cent. more. Here the Aitchison Patent Pocket Field Glass comes in. It weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick, and its power and definition are equal to many glasses four times the size sold at three times the price. It will stand an astonishing amount of rough usage.

THE AITCHISON PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS weighs five ounces and closes to one inch thick for pocket.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH" writes:—

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC QUICK-FIRING MACHINE-GUN
AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of 303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space, weighs about 600 lbs.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

THE scanty intelligence that filters through from Bloemfontein day by day continues to be of a peaceful character save for an occasional affair of outposts. In some respects the news is distinctly bucolic. Refreshing rains have fallen, and new grass is springing up on the veldt. The farmers from the surrounding country are filling the town, bringing in their waggons laden with produce, which they sell freely to the troops. With the 14th Infantry Brigade, a Brigade of Cavalry, half the Brigade of Guards and the Gordon Highlanders encamped north of the town near the Modder River and guarding his front, Lord Roberts behind the curtain of the censor, now again closely drawn, is still engaged in the necessary work of recuperating the over-wrought powers of his army, securing his flanks and rear preparatory to an onward move, inspecting his brigades, reorganising his transport, and forming depôts of supply. The long and rapid marches from Paardeburg, with heavy fighting under a tropical sun and without water, were trying almost beyond endurance to the troops. The wear and tear of horseflesh is a serious factor to be faced, and one that will continue in an increasing ratio until the end of the war, as the lines of advance lengthen out, necessitating, as we have frequently urged, an unstinted and continuous supply of remounts, as well as a substantial increase of the veterinary staff. At Kroonstad, the Boer headquarters, 120 miles to the north, 20,000 Boers are said to be concentrating for a determined stand, but a preliminary fight at Brandfort is not improbable. Continuous arrivals of hostile commandoes and the holding of councils of war at Kroonstad are reported. That place would appear to be one favourably situated for defence, being covered by the Valsch River flowing across its front, and backed by a range of mountains. The position is no doubt being strongly entrenched on a wide front by the Boers, according to their wont, as they seem hardly yet to have appreciated the new power developed in the British Army since the creation of mobile columns conferring the ability to avoid a frontal attack on their impregnable trenches, and to work round their flanks.

The general attitude and intentions of the Boer leaders appear to be full of uncertainty, which is likely to be increased by the death of General Joubert, their ablest strategist and most chivalric soldier. President Kruger is said to have constituted himself Commandant-General of the Boer Army, and owing to the dissensions now existing between the Free Staters and Transvaalers, it is possible that no serious resistance may be offered to Lord Roberts's advance until he attempts the passage of the Vaal River. There is now no doubt that Commandant Olivier, trekking with a force said to be 6,000 strong, with numerous waggons, the retreating commandoes from Colesberg and Stormberg, has eluded General French's column, which with worn-out horses was unable to pursue, and has passed to the north along the Basuto border. He is reported to have reached a point north of Winburg, and to be far on the road to Kroonstad, after resting his force, prostrated by incessant marching day and night, at Clocolan for forty-eight hours. General French has rejoined Lord Roberts at Bloemfontein from Thabanchu without fighting, but having captured a number of the enemy's waggons with supplies. He left Colonel Broadwood to hold that place, as well as the Leenw River flour-mills twenty-five miles farther east. Colonel Pilcher, whose raid against the Sunnyside rebels and Douglas on the western border in December and January, will be remembered, has appeared at Ladybrand. Descending like a meteor with a small party upon the place on Monday, he captured its Landdrost, but was subsequently obliged to withdraw before a superior force of the enemy, which may have been the rear-guard of Olivier's commando covering the movement of his convoy towards Senekal, a town sixty miles to the north. The taking and holding of Ladybrand by the British is necessary to complete Lord Roberts's chain of posts across the Orange State from Jacobsdal to the Basuto border, and we shall no doubt hear very shortly of its effective occupation. Generals Clements, Gatacre, and Brabant have apparently accomplished their work in the occupied districts north of the Orange River. General Clements, marching towards Bloemfontein in several columns from Philipopolis, entered Fauresmith and the neighbouring mining town of Jagersfontein on Tuesday, and was well received. Fauresmith is the chief town in the south-western part of the Orange Free State, situated at an important junction of main roads. A garrison has been placed there, the retention of the place being necessary for the pacification of the districts of which it is the centre. A commando was stated to have been entrenched at this point, and to be determined to offer a stubborn resistance, but General Clements entered without opposition. With the dispersal of this commando—if it existed—all organised Boer forces have disappeared from the south of Bloemfontein. General Gatacre's column, marching north by the east side of the railway from Springfontein where he has been chiefly occupied in receiving the submission of the Burghers, reached Bloemfontein on Tuesday.

General Brabant's column of colonial horsemen, based on Aliwal North, is available either for an advance northwards along the Basutoland border, or for return, if necessary, to the districts of Cape Colony where rebellion so lately reared its head. On Saturday Sir Alfred Milner reviewed General Brabant's command at Aliwal North, and expressed his admiration at the appearance of the men, and his appreciation of the excellent work they had done in crushing the rebel movement in the eastern portion of Cape Colony, and in assisting to free the invaded districts. On Tuesday the High Commissioner arrived at Bloemfontein, where he was given a cordial reception by the townsfolk. Rebellion is still more or less active in the west. A rebel commando was reported on the 23rd inst. to be entrenched between Van Wyk's Vlei and Kenhart, but to have since crossed the river into Gordonia. Sir Charles Parsons' column, sweeping through the country, was moving against them in the direction of Kenhart. Further north the Transvaal Boers, augmented in numbers since the relief of Kimberley, have re-occupied Griquatown, commandeering and looting. Bodies of rebels, moreover, have been seen again near Barkly West. It is evident that constant vigilance and the operation of mobile columns will be required for a considerable time yet, before the turbulent spirits among the Dutch subjects of the Queen return to a state of complete allegiance. A commando of 800 Boers with four guns still holds the position on the north bank of the Vaal at Fourteen Streams, and a sharp attack was made on the British force at Warrenton on the south bank on Wednesday morning, but without inflicting any serious loss on our troops. The latest message from beleaguered Mafeking, is dated the 16th inst., and is more reassuring, although the task of freeing the garrison appears to be at present beyond the power of Colonel Plumer's force. Encircled by its trenches the place continues both to bid defiance to the enemy's continuous bombardment, and to develop its own internal resources, having established an ordnance factory capable of producing shells, fuzes, and gunpowder of serviceable quality, in addition to a 5½ in. howitzer—a truly remarkable performance. Now that Colonel Plumer has been checked at Lobatsi by superior forces, there is all the more pressing need for increased effort to reach Mafeking from the south. Meanwhile there is some reason to think that the resources of the place will enable it to hold out until relief comes, the difficulty of feeding the natives having been got over by some means not yet explained.

News from Natal as to the strength, position, and intentions of the Boers there are conflicting, and notwithstanding all that we have heard of the fortifying of the Biggarsberg, it appears now to be possible that, instead of defending that formidable line of mountains, the Boers may decide to vacate them and defend the passes only. On the 20th inst. the Boer line along the Biggarsbergs extended from Cundyclough in the west resting on the Drakensbergs to Beith in the east, a distance of forty miles. Its strongest portion lay across the Newcastle road, with advanced posts at Waschbank and Meran ten miles north of Elands Laagte, where Sir Redvers Buller holds the rail-head. On the Free State side the enemy hold the passes of the Drakensbergs from Olivier's Hoek to Cundyclough, their main force being at Van Reenen's Pass. On the Zululand border a commando was stationed to guard the left flank. The total strength of the Boers in this part is now estimated at 10,000—a small force, notwithstanding their mobility, to defend so extended a line. The main army of the Transvaal is supposed to be massing at Kroonstad to oppose Lord Roberts, and it is not impossible that the reports of deserters may prove to be correct, and that the Biggarsberg range may be found to have been evacuated in favour of the passes when the British again advance. The flying column of Colonial scouts is reported to have had a sharp skirmish with the Boers in Zululand about the 20th inst., and to have captured much cattle. The steady flow of reinforcements to South Africa continues unabated. Some 30,000 men have landed there during the current month. The Eighth Division is expected to disembark shortly at Port Elizabeth and East London to take the shortest lines of advance to the front. The total numbers in the field, even when supplemented by the further 26,000 to be despatched in April, will be none too much to secure that rapid and effective prosecution of the war which is so great a desideratum. The task yet to be performed by Lord Roberts is one of great magnitude, when the distances to be traversed and the areas to be occupied are considered. The western rebellion is still far from being crushed, and many small garrisons will be required both east and west to prevent the recrudescence of disloyalty, who have taken up arms, and the amount of compensation due to loyalists for losses sustained are matters lying outside his province. It is essential, however, for the future prosperity of South Africa that the Queen's authority be vindicated, and that the loyalty of those who are standing so nobly by the mother country in the war be given no cause for disappointment and discouragement.

Army Notes.

"When I joined Sir Colin Campbell's headquarters at Cawnpore early in February, 1858," writes W. H. R., "the Commander-in-Chief's personal staff, of whom Sir Archibald Alison, and Sir David Baird are, I think, the only survivors, was very small, and the members of it dined with Sir Colin. There was a large tent for the staff mess to which I belonged, and not many of the officers whom I met there are now alive. Major Donald Stewart, of whose lamented death I have just heard with great regret, was D.A.G. My place at the mess table was between him and George Allgood, who was, when I last had any information about him, living on his paternal acres in Northumberland. Four of the men in that camp lived to become Field-Marshal, of whom two—Stewart and Napier—belonged to the old Indian Army, and three—Sir Colin, Sir R. Napier, and Major Roberts—lived to be peers of the realm. Major Stewart had just made a name by a remarkable ride with despatches from Agra to the British force before Delhi through a district swarming with the enemy, which he never voluntarily mentioned, and was spoken of as one of Sir Colin's favourite Indian officers; but he certainly never gave himself any airs or pretensions, and was sociable and pleasant to all around. Alert and active, he united with devotion to soldiering a taste for sport, shooting, fishing, of which he was a devotee, up to an advanced period of his life; and young as he was he had collected an immense amount of information, and was not above astonishing his friends by a bit of Latin from some classical author. He had a shrewd humour and a keen sense of the ludicrous, which he exercised occasionally at the expense of the members of the staff. At that time Sir Donald's soldierly appearance marked him even amongst the beaux-sabreurs at Cawnpore—Toombs Probyn, and others whose names I forget. Many years afterwards I saw him at the camp before Delhi during the Prince of Wales's visit—a Major-General in command of the Lahore district. The next time we met he was Field-Marshal—a passenger on board a steamer from New York, returning with his friend Sir Charles Brownlow from a fishing expedition in Canada, and if time had left some traces on his face and figure it had in no degree impaired the agreeable qualities which had distinguished the young brevet-major in the camp at Cawnpore in 1857."

The meeting of the Militia Rifle Association, at which Lord Wolseley presided on Wednesday last, was a remarkable gathering in more than one respect. In point of mere numbers, and in the fact that nearly every representative Militia officer left in the country was present, it contrasted favourably with previous assemblies. But what we desire to emphasise was the sympathetic, business-like attitude of the Commander-in-Chief. His lordship candidly admitted that upon the Militia the country is now—as it was of yore—to a great extent dependent in times of national stress. Nothing could have been more frank than Lord Wolseley's recognition of the part the Militia battalions have already played—without fuss or flurry, be it said—in the present emergency; nothing could have been better than the well-balanced speeches of the officers who took part in the discussion. Those who addressed the meeting knew indeed the requirements, and were well in touch with the feelings of their branch of the service. They evidently carried their hearers with them, and gave voice to the opinion of all thinking soldiers. For our own part, however, we have seen aspirations of equally reasonable quality too frequently strangled by out-of-date prejudices to feel absolute confidence that common-sense treatment of the old constitutional force will suddenly be resorted to. Yet, as the chief military adviser of the Government has spoken with no uncertain sound, and as Lord Lansdowne is believed to have an open mind on the subject, we join in the hope eloquently expressed by the Earl of March that "after the glamour of this war has passed, the recollection of what the Militia has been proved capable of doing—of what it has done—will not pass also."

So far our arms have gone—and no farther as yet than they were last week in the Free State. General French and his great cavalry force have returned to Bloemfontein. Olivier has apparently evaded them, but it does not seem clear whether he is a helpless fugitive with a fast-diminishing band of runagates, or whether he is a force to be reckoned with. There are large bodies of troops under Clements, Gatacre, and Chermiside, of whose actual operations we have no precise account, and Buller with his fine army is still as they were, apparently, in North-East Natal; while the Boers are said to be preparing to defend the Drakensburg from Van Reenen's Pass to Lang's Nek. There are soothsayers in Pall Mall who affirm that our flag will float over Pretoria before the middle of May —so it is said. One great battle, of which the result cannot be doubtful, must be fought to give the coup de grace to the forces of the Transvaal. It is not impossible that it will need one other before the Boers disappear from the field as an organised enemy, and the Transvaal lowers its flag for ever.

It is not easy to find a suitable adjective for the occurrence near Bloemfontein yesterday week, which Lord Roberts describes as "unfortunate." The encounter with a party of the enemy in which the officers commanding the Grenadier and the Coldstream Battalions, Lieut.-Colonel Crabbe and Lieut.-Colonel Codrington were wounded, Captain Trotter (Grenadiers) had his right arm shattered, and Lieutenant Hon. E. Lygon (Grenadiers) was killed, was unpremeditated. It is absurd to suggest that the Boers "ambushed," "lured," or "entrapped" them. How could they know that our officers would go "a-codnelling," as Hudibras says, so incautiously outside their lines? When Sir Colin Campbell commanded at Balaclava he gave positive orders that no one was to be allowed outside his lines, and he gave Colonel Sullivan, of the Greys, and Feraal, 4th Light Dragoons, a severe wiggling for their venturing to shoot duck and snipe on the Tchernaya, although they had a whole line of pickets between them and the Russians. The Times correspondent says that they "were out foraging at farms" eight miles north of Glen Camp, where the Guards were stationed in advance of Bloemfontein. Now, looking at the circumstances, it is apparent that there were elements in this case which removed it from mere marketing excursions. The enemy were known to be near, the people in a state of sullen submission. But the party entered a railway cutting "to examine the telegraphic communication." It might have been supposed that the orderly would have been ordered to ride on ahead to see that the coast was clear. At all events, they rode out of the siding, and seeing four Boers ride off "they conceived the idea of catching them, and divided on both sides of the kopje," two and two. The officers had only their revolvers. The Boers at once shot down every one of the party; but when one of them managed to hold a white handkerchief aloft they came to the wounded men—"did," says Lord Roberts, "all they possibly could for them, attending to their wounds and getting them conveyed to the nearest farm, where they were taken care of during the night," while news of the "unfortunate occurrence" was sent by the Boers to the Guards' camp. They suffered severely for their confidence and courage. At all events, "they did not turn and fly." It is very doubtful if our friend, Major Von Bludwitz, would have approved of it, or any German, French, or Russian general. Colonel Crabbe and Colonel Codrington are officers of judgment and experience, and we shall know all the facts presently.

The General of Communications has to contribute week after week the inevitable death-rolls from the hospitals in South Africa, where the dreadful camp-follower, Enteric, is in active rivalry with the casualties caused in war by rifle, cannon, and steel. Capetown, Wynberg, Naauwpoort, Kimberley, East London, Modder River, De Aar, Maritzburg, Mooi River, Chieveley, &c.—every regiment in each branch of the Service furnishes its victims—enteric, dysentery, wounds, but it would seem as if Colonials were comparatively immune from the general maladies. The torrential rains, which are flooding the camps and converting the camp grounds into swamps and the spruities into roaring torrents, are not for betterment of the situation in a sanitary or military sense, and the corps of medical officers and nurses now on their way to South Africa will be needed over and over again. In addition to the demands on the R.A.M.C. and its auxiliaries, there is now a serious outbreak of enteric among the Boer prisoners on board the transports at Simon's Bay, which will probably extend to the prisoners on shore, and we should like to hear of some improvement there.

If there is any officer who must feel that the present war has demonstrated his insight in advocating the use of Mounted Infantry, it is Major-General Hallam-Parr, now in command at Shorncliffe, who years ago and for many years worked at his "hobby," as it was called, and devoted his best energies to the training of infantry men who were on show at many reviews, were much praised, and then quietly "dropped as exponents of an interesting 'fad.'" Now, according to some of our military reformers, there is no salvation for an army but "mounted infantry." "Mobility" is the sine qua non of South Africans. We doubt whether Lord Roberts or any soldier of experience will approve of the wholesale conversion which General Hallam-Parr never ventured to advocate, but that Mounted Infantry, although they have not carried positions or decided important engagements, in this war have proved their immense power and value in dealing with Boer commandoes is incontestable.

The Press correspondents who have hard and unsatisfactory times of it under the censorship, and leave it to the editorial staff of the papers they serve to clothe the dry bones of their despatches with the flesh of print and dress them with gigantic headlines "Buller's Advance," "Plumer's Retirement," and similar decorations, have been conspicuously unanimous in the vagueness of treatment exhibited in their despatches with regard to the Royal Artillery R.F.A. and R.H.A. batteries, being set down without numbers or letters when the details of a column are given, although the other components, Cavalry and Infantry regiments, are accurately designated. The numbers of Field, and the letters of Horse batteries are as interesting and useful as the names of Infantry and the numbers of Cavalry regiments.

The accounts we have seen of the strain to which the Field Artillery was subjected in South Africa are not pleasant. A battery is ordered to march to the front. After a march of twenty miles it arrives at a halting-place at noon and is about to water and feed when it is ordered to proceed full speed ten miles farther. When it reached the scene of action six horses had to be cut from the waggons, three of which died immediately and two soon after, the men having been for twenty-seven hours without any food except emergency rations, bivouacked on the ground in pouring rain. No wonder the horses were pumped next day. Other batteries had the same experience, and horseflesh has suffered terribly in the Orange River Free State.

The detailed accounts of the relief of Ladysmith show at once how creditable the behaviour of Sir George White's troops was. Unlike Kimberley, Ladysmith was merely a garrison town; hence it had no resources to fall back upon such as those afforded by the De Beers diamond industry. It was commanded on every side by hills, and was invested by the main army of the Republics, under their ablest general. That a position strategically so weak should have held out for over four months is due to a combination of British naval resource, British military skill, and British endurance such as the world has not witnessed since the Indian Mutiny. From Sir George White, the chivalrous commander, to the women who pluckily refused to avail themselves of the privileges of the neutral camp, every one of the defenders was animated by the same spirit. What they suffered is only now beginning to come home to us. The constant bombardment of the town alone must have tried their nerves severely. To face death in the heat of battle is a very different thing from dodging him day after day, week after week, and month after month in the depressing atmosphere of a besieged town. Of the privations endured for want of sufficient food gaunt faces and hollow eyes told a silent, though eloquent, tale. The lack of good water, which Kimberley had in abundance, was another misery of daily life. When to these sufferings were added insanitary conditions, monotony, deferred hope, and the depressing effect of being cooped up in a narrow space, some idea may be formed of the pluck required to keep the flag flying above the town. Towards the end of the siege the slaughtered horses being borne to the meat market must have been another trial. The defence of Ladysmith is not only one of the great events of the present war, it is one of the great events in the history of the British Empire.

It would appear that the question of carrying ammunition has been the subject of inquiry, not only at the War Office but also at the front. The results of these two independent investigations point towards a system of bandoliers, and the War Office, taking time by the forelock, has actually despatched many thousands of woven bandoliers, of a quality superior to leather, to the troops in South Africa. The Special Correspondent of the Times, writing from the Modder River after the battles, on Jan. 31, said: "I saw a heap of ammunition lost out of the men's pouches, and picked up on the battlefield of Enslin, hardly less than 1,200 rounds." The chief argument for the retention of the wallets is that their weight balances the weights carried on the back. Even this recommendation would of course cease to exist if the latter burdens are removed. The matter is of the first importance, and the experience gained now should be collected at once. Before leaving the subject it may be added that the soldier's habit of throwing a handful of cartridges beside him when firing leads to waste, and is only necessary because of the impossibility of getting ammunition easily from the present pouches. We believe that the prompt action of the War Office will lead to a sufficient supply of cartridges to the firing line in action by enabling men to carry extra bandoliers into that advanced position. A Captain of the Highland Brigade just home, wounded, from all Lord Methuen's battles, writes:—"There were no complaints from either officers or men of the Service magazine rifle, but there was difficulty in keeping the firing line supplied with cartridges, as the men soon fired away their 200 rounds." Of course men have to lie down under the withering fire of magazine rifles, especially when the shower of bullets come from trenches; it follows, therefore, that the men distributing a further supply to the line lying down, are exposed to almost certain death; hence we believe we shall hear of firing lines carrying extra bandoliers into action.

The special correspondent of the Morning Post at Bloemfontein in a despatch dated Saturday last, draws attention, to the enormous losses among the horses of the Field Force owing to what he speaks of as "the cheeseparing policy adopted by the War Office towards the Veterinary Department." We are told that "the veterinary surgeons are everywhere overworked." The introduction of civil assistance is condemned, "valuable time being necessarily wasted in learning the details of routine, and friction unavoidable." He expresses a hope that in any new scheme brought forward by the War Office "provision will be made for placing the Veterinary Department on a more ample and secure footing. The correspondent of the Morning Post is not alone in taking this view, for more than one cavalry officer has written to us on the same lines of sympathy and condemnation. The devotion of the Veterinary Staff, we are assured, "has been beyond praise, but the department is so under-officered that its staff have been quite unable to cope with the work they have had to do." Meanwhile, the War Office is still "considering" the terms of a long-promised warrant. We are at war, horses are being shipped to the scene of action by thousands, veterinary officers are urgently required; yet the Service has been rendered so unpopular, by reason of a recent statement in the House of Commons, that candidates are not forthcoming to fill vacancies. It is not to be wondered at. At the same time, it is to be regretted that the War Office should have gone out of its way to create a difficulty which ought to have been foreseen. It is in its power now to put matters right, and in the interests of the Service we trust it will do so promptly, seeing how seriously the pocket of the taxpayer is affected.

The lion of the Transvaal is dead. The one Boer leader who, through all the miserable history of the past twenty-three years, retained the respect of this country, has gone to his account. Unlike the men among whom his lot was cast, he was of Huguenot descent, a fact which revealed itself in his alert, if massive, figure, his racy humour, and his openness to ideas. In the purest sense of the term he was a patriot; his integrity has never once been questioned by anybody.

He was the only one of the Boer leaders who refused a position and a salary under the British administration in 1877. It is, however, a mistake to suppose that he was more friendly to England than President Kruger. His attitude up to the hour of his death was the same as it was in 1877; but having a fairly good education, and widened his views by travel, he saw clearly that his life-long rival, on public and personal grounds, was driving the country to ruin. Unfortunately the burghers rejected him for the Presidency in 1893, a mistake as disastrous for the Transvaal as the rejection of Mr. Fraser in the Orange Free State. Though General Joubert was undoubtedly the greatest of the Boer Generals, having gained his experience in a dozen native wars, and proved his capacity in the first Transvaal war, he has steadily lost ground with the younger Boers during the present war. There is little doubt the plan of campaign was his, following as it does the main outlines of that of 1880-1, which was also his, but the modifications of it, which resulted in the raiding and looting expeditions beyond the Tugela and the disastrous attack on Ladysmith of January 6, were entirely against his better judgment. Of all the Boer commanders in the field General Joubert alone was never accused of violating the usages of civilised warfare. Perhaps the best tribute which can be paid him is General White's: "He was a soldier, a gentleman, and an honourable foe." He was all these things, and his memory will be respected by all ranks of the British Army.

The success which has attended the operations of Lord Roberts reminds the Miktar-Wochenblatt of the very different conditions that prevailed a short time ago. It remarks that our reverses at Magersfontein, Sterkstroom, and Colenso were independent incidents of the campaign, whereas the recent misfortunes of the Boers—their retirement from Cape Colony, and their abandonment of the siege of Ladysmith, were a direct result of the rapid and well-ordered advance of Lord Roberts. The characteristic distinction between the two conditions enforces the very great importance of numerical superiority in war. It is to our great strength that the Wochenblatt attributes our recent victories, and it points out that the Boers, even when they had secured their advantages, were not in sufficient force, or sufficiently well led, to assume the tactical offensive with success. Our contemporary questions whether the strategical offensive adopted by the Boers in three distinct theatres of the war was wise. It criticises our adversaries also for some of their "eccentric objects." The result was that their advance in Cape Colony, where they depended largely upon a rising among the colonial farmers, was undertaken with insufficient force, and it is the view of the Wochenblatt, which seems reasonable, that the Boers should have made a determined attack upon our line of communications between De Aar and Kimberley before the main body of our reinforcements could arrive. It was also an error on the part of the Boers to remain so long inactive at Magersfontein. The Wochenblatt adds that the advantage of the Boers lies in their individual character, and that their organisation is imperfect and probably made it impossible for them to assume the tactical offensive successfully. Their greatest failure in this matter was in Natal, where they should have attempted to attack Sir Redvers Buller in force, but the chief command was weak, and though excellent use was made of their qualities as riflemen, they were not properly employed in offensive operations.

The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung devotes an article to the attack upon fortified positions in relation to the war, and proposes to pursue the subject. It remarks that this matter is supremely important, and that it is eminently desirable to draw lessons from the operations in order that the peace training of the army may be supplemented by the fruit of experience. The difficulty of the attack has grown with the increased efficiency of weapons, and the advantage of the defensive is now very considerable. Everything in the course of the war, which tended more and more to become a war of positions, has shown how enormously the power of modern armaments surpasses that of the weapons of a few years ago; and the Heeres-Zeitung remarks that we have failed in all our attacks upon well prepared positions, and that we should have suffered a good deal if the Boers had been able or willing to act on the offensive after our reverses. The geographical conditions of South Africa, as the Berlin organ says lend themselves in an extraordinary degree to defensive operations, and we have constantly been obliged to attack under difficulties. In the German army, we are told, the spirit of the offensive is very strong and, notwithstanding the greater difficulties that are now found in the attack, that spirit must be maintained. The events in South Africa have brought no surprises to Germans, whose peace operations and trials had demonstrated to them the conditions that are now so clearly seen. The first thought of the assailant is naturally that he must attempt no frontal attack, but it has so happened in South Africa that frontal attacks have been made with great loss, and in Natal, when we attempted to turn the position, we found that the Boers, owing to their mobility and excellent intelligence service, had been able practically to change front to meet us. There, says the Heeres-Zeitung, the enemy showed their best qualities on the defensive, and remarks that their fault was in not advancing to make a decisive counter-attack. Our contemporary is full of admiration for the personal qualities of the Boer as a soldier, and it concludes that Mounted Infantry, such as the enemy's forces were largely composed of, are the arms most likely to be wanted in modern wars.

Mr. Balfour's promise of a Parliamentary inquiry into the alleged cases of fraud in connection with Army contracts has given general satisfaction. It is reassuring to find that the Government has at last come to realise the strength of feeling that has been excited not only in Service circles, but in the country generally, by the revelations to which we have of late been treated. When questioned on the subject last week Mr. Powell Williams, we were sorry to see, gave the soft official answer that fails to turn away wrath. With the Commander-in-Chief complaining of the quality of the boots furnished to the troops, and others raising an outcry with regard to the forage that had been shipped, it was useless for the representative of the War Office to hold up his hands and tell us it was all very dreadful. Indeed, the Financial Secretary to the War Office made things look blacker even than they had looked. When members heard the strange story of contractors being struck off the lists and then reappearing under an alias, they felt that there must be something rotten in the War Office system. Publicity kills suspicion, and it is felt that the matter is so serious that it ought to be sifted to the very bottom, and effectual means devised to prevent a recurrence of such abuses as have been found to exist. We do not want a repetition of the contract scandals of the Crimean War, and it is to be hoped that the Government will not only hold an inquiry but act on its recommendations. Of course, nothing can be done in the matter till the Law Officers of the Crown have given their opinion as to whether legal proceedings can be taken against the defaulters. If so, the legal process will precede the Parliamentary investigation, but in any case it is essential that the latter should be held. Mr. Balfour, when he promised the inquiry, said, "A most erroneous idea had gained currency that there are facts to conceal, and that there had been a desire to conceal them." We sincerely hope that the idea is erroneous, but there can be no denying that there are ugly suspicions afloat which "in justice to the War Office" it is desirable either to have proved or else disproved.

Mr. Wyndham has effectually disposed of the suggestion that a slight had been put on the Colonies by offering them commissions in the Infantry only. It was argued that the men who are likely to be attracted by the offer of service in the home Army would be particularly suited for the Cavalry, and the old "anything-good-enough-for-the-Line" slur was duly trotted out. The Under-Secretary for War has replied to the objectors by pointing out that the reason why no cavalry commissions are being offered to the Colonies is because the War Office has been led to believe that they would rarely be acceptable. Everyone knows that officers in the Regular Army in England cannot live on their pay, and the fact that a commission in a cavalry regiment is a more expensive luxury than one in the infantry is a consideration which is likely to weigh in the Colonies. If, however, any suitable application is made from a colony for a cavalry in lieu of an infantry commission, the War Office will be quite ready to entertain it. Meanwhile, the effect the granting of direct Army commissions is likely to have on cadets at Woolwich and Sandhurst is beginning to exercise the minds of the Service members. If young men entering the Army in this way are to get their commissions over the heads of those who have already passed their examinations at Woolwich and Sandhurst, the latter will certainly have a grievance. We are glad to learn that the matter has been engaging attention. A small committee of the Service members, consisting of Sir James Fergusson, Major Grice-Hutchinson, and Major Rasch, has been formed to go into the subject, and hopes are expressed that a way out of the difficulty will be found.

That Militia officers in South Africa should take rank below the officers of junior forces like the Imperial Yeomanry and the Volunteers is simply absurd. Lord Lansdowne, we note, admitted the grievance when his attention was called to the matter by Lord Raglan, on Thursday. The Secretary of State for War was not, however, prepared to suggest any remedy. He put it down as one of those minor difficulties which always spring up in the course of a war. When the War Office decided to avail itself of the aid proffered by the Volunteers at the commencement of the hostilities in South Africa the fact had to be faced that the commissions of Volunteer officers did not confer upon them any command outside the limits of the United Kingdom. It was decided, therefore, to give them temporary commissions in the Regular Army. These commissions last only during the continuance of the war, and on the termination of the campaign the holders revert to their old position. But this does not do away with the fact that whilst at the front the Volunteer and Imperial Yeomanry officers supersede officers in the Militia. It may be as Lord Lansdowne says, that instances of the question of precedence arising are likely to be few and far between, but even the possibility of such a thing ought to have been avoided.

The question as to whether the time has not come when some change should be made in the general service uniform for the Regular Army has often been mooted. It is now, it would seem, actually engaging the attention of the War Office itself. A suggestion has been made that khaki should be introduced as the uniform of the Volunteers. What is suitable for South Africa is not necessarily desirable in England—quite the contrary; but there is certainly a good deal to be said for the contention that if any change is to be made in the colour or material of uniforms no better time could be found for introducing it than the present, when recruits are pouring into both the Regular and Auxiliary forces. We are glad, therefore, to hear that the authorities are seriously considering the matter in so far as it affects the Regular Army.

The conditions upon which commissions in the Regular Cavalry will be granted to Yeomanry officers were explained by Lord Lansdowne in answer to a question put to him by Lord Newton on Thursday night. One commission is to be given to each Yeomanry Brigade. The age of the candidates must be between twenty and thirty, and there is a stipulation that they shall be unmarried. It goes without saying, of course, that they must be medically fit to enter the Regulars. They will have to submit themselves for examination in this respect before the Medical Board in London.

Mr. Wyndham stated the other night in answer to a question in the House of Commons, that it was the intention to institute inquiries into the case of Lieut.-Colonel Gough. As, however, Colonel Gough has been placed on retired pay, it is doubtful whether much benefit will result to the gallant officer should such inquiry be made. We cannot bring to mind any case in which an officer once retired has been reinstated, and we very much doubt whether that of the late commanding officer of the 9th Lancers is likely to be made an exception; but he has the satisfaction at least of knowing that among cavalry officers he has many sympathisers, for it is, unfortunately, only too evident that the capacity of horses is much overrated, and the functions of mounted troops very much misunderstood. In almost every letter we receive from South Africa we find surprise is expressed that in our present campaign there has been such absolute ignorance displayed as to the value and capabilities of Cavalrymen; one Staff Officer, and he is an infantryman, who writes, tells us that the ignorance under this head has made him "blush more than once and wonder at the success of our arms, seeing that one day horses have been worked to death and on other days expected to perform quite impossible tasks, as poor Colonel Gough was called upon to do."

The military proposals of the Government of India for the year 1900 are of a very progressive character. They include the rearmament of the Native Army and Volunteers with the magazine rifle, the provision of the necessary apparatus for making lyddite in India, the rearmament of the Mountain Batteries, an important improvement in the military factories, the addition of ninety-two officers to the native regiments of the Punjab and Bengal, the re-organisation of the Horse, Field, and Mountain Batteries, the conversion of heavy batteries into Howitzer Batteries, and an improvement of the transport and ambulance services. Experiments will be made with war balloons, and a reserve of transport drivers will be created. About 90 lakhs of rupees are provided for these purposes in the Estimates for next year.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY ARMY ESTIMATES.

Mr. Wyndham has laid on the table of the House of Commons an explanatory statement of the details of the Supplementary Army Estimate of £23,000,000. The amount is divided into thirteen votes. The pay of the Army will absorb £3,400,000, including—

Vote 2 comprises the medical establishment pay amounting to £120,000, £15,000 being devoted to the pay of the Army Medical service, £50,000 to the pay of civil medical practice, and £40,000 the cost of medicine and instruments.

Vote 13, for £10,000, provides for War Office contingencies.

The War Office has called for returns showing the approximate number of Militia recruits volunteering to join their units abroad, and who will by April 1 fulfil the conditions of age and service to qualify them for joining their units.

In consequence of the small number of troops in London (two Guards' battalions instead of the normal five) the Bank of England and Royal Mint guards have been reduced, the former now consisting of one officer and 24 of other ranks. The duties at the Tower and the Mint are now supplied by the 5th Batn. Royal Fusiliers, which have arrived at the Tower from Dover.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Cambridge attained his 81st year on Monday, having been born March 26, 1819. His Royal Highness is about to proceed to Malta on a visit to General Sir Francis Grenfell.

The Duke of Connaught has taken into his own hands all the military arrangements in connection with Her Majesty's visit to Ireland next week, and the result has been that every attempt will be made to bring the appearance of the streets of Dublin into a line with the pageant that marked the Queen's procession from Buckingham Palace to St. Paul's on Diamond Jubilee Day in 1897. The journey from Kingstown to Dublin will be about eight miles in length.

Arrangements have been made, says the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, for the temporary continuance of Lord Wolseley in the office of Commander-in-Chief beyond November 1. It is not known whether Lord Roberts—whose succession to the position is inevitable—will then have arrived in England. Lord Roberts has, in fact, made known to the Government—and his resolution is approved of—that he prefers to remain in South Africa until his part in the resettlement of the two States has been completed. In his Lordship's absence Lord Wolseley's continuance in office would be determined upon.

Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Marshall, K.C.M.G., Colonel of the Royal Dragoons, was a passenger to South Africa, where he served in command of a Cavalry Brigade during the Zulu War in 1879, on board the Briton on Saturday. The Brigade, however, was chiefly used by Lord Chelmsford on the lines of communication, and General Marshall was deprived of the means of turning his fine force en bloc as a cavalry power, to his great chagrin. His son, Major Marshall, who, up to the time of his promotion, was Captain of the Queen's Company of the 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, went out a short time ago with the 2nd Batn. for South Africa. The General's eldest daughter is married to Captain Lawson, of the Scots Guards, who is also in the field, and his second daughter is the wife of Captain de Winton, who is also serving against the Boers, so that there is a good area of family interest to engage Sir Frederick Marshall's thoughts at the seat of War.

Lieut.-General E. Hopton, C.B., has been appointed to the Colonelcy of the Connaught Rangers, which has been vacant since the death of General J. E. Thackwell, C.B. General Hopton received his first commission in the 88th, October 27, 1854, and commanded it from December, 1880, to December, 1884.

Lieut.-General Sir Leslie Rundle, and Staff of the 8th Division, arrived at Cape Town on Wednesday from England.

Major-General R. T. Thynne, C.B., has received a further extension of his term of command of the North-Eastern District, until September 30.

Major-General F. T. Lloyd, C.B., is permitted to retain his appointment as Governor and Commandant of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, until August, 1902, to complete five years.

Major-General A. E. Turner, C.B., lately A.A.G. for Royal Artillery at Headquarters, has taken up the duties of Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces on the separation of the office from that of Inspector-General of Recruiting.

Major-General E. P. Leach, V.C., C.B., R.E., has been appointed to the command of the Belfast District, vice Lieut.-General Sir F. Carrington, embarked for South Africa.

Brigadier-General Norman R. Stewart, I.S.C., commanding the Hyderabad Contingent, has succeeded to the baronetcy by the death of his father, Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart. He was born September 27, 1851, joined the 68th Light Infantry December 31, 1871, joined the Staff Corps as a Captain October 29, 1879, and became Colonel, March 23, 1890. He served in the Afghan War, 1878-80 (medal with clasp), mentioned in despatches, and Brevet-Majority and the Soudan Expedition, 1885 (mentioned in despatches, medal with two clasps, bronze star, and brevet of Lieut.-Colonel).

The appointment of P.M.O. Madras Army, in place of Surgeon-General C. McVittie, I.M.S., who retires this month, passes to a medical officer of the Bombay Presidency, it having been ruled that this Madras appointment should go alternately to Bombay and Madras. Surgeon-General McVittie belonged to the Madras Army, and served for some time in the Hyderabad Contingent. It was believed that Colonel Branfoot, I.M.S., also a Madras officer, would succeed.

Colonel Mildmay Willson, C.B., half-pay, late Scots Guards, has passed to the establishment as a Major-General over the heads of five other Guardsmen who are senior to him, viz., Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox, Lord Arthur Wellesley, Colonels the Hon. H. W. L. Corry, H. Fludyer, H. Ricardo, and Sir Edmund Antrobus. This has occasioned surprise. The explanation is that Colonel Willson in the Soudan Expedition of 1884-5 exercised a most difficult command at Gubat with marked ability. He was mentioned in despatches and received a C.B. in recognition of his services. This was held by the Promotion Board to constitute a claim to advancement.

Colonel C. H. Scott, C.B., R.A., as was expected, has been given the appointment of Consulting Officer for India on the Ordnance Committee, which has been vacant since the retirement of Colonel J. G. Stone. Colonel Scott, who has been an Inspector-General of Ordnance in India since June, 1895, has been continuously connected with the department since November, 1878, when he joined it as a Subaltern.

Colonel R. K. S. Parke, half pay, late 3rd Dragoon Guards, leaves England to-day for South Africa in the Galeka, in command of the sharpshooters of the Imperial Yeomanry, for service under Sir Frederick Carrington.

Colonel H. Paget, C.B., half pay, late 7th Hussars, has accepted command of a battalion of Imperial Yeomanry.

Colonel A. W. Anstruther-Duncan, after having been on half pay for fifteen months, succeeds Colonel R. W. Rainsford-Hannay as Colonel on the Staff, commanding the Royal Artillery, Cork, on the latter's departure for South Africa.

Colonel H. P. Leach, C.B., D.S.O., R.E., has been appointed to the Second-class District Command, Punjab, vacant by the retirement of Colonel H. S. Brownrigg, but continues for the present to officiate in command of the Presidency District.

Colonel E. C. Browne, is to retain command of the 21st Regimental District, Ayr, until September 30.

Colonel R. C. Hare, from the 63rd Regimental District, Manchester, succeeds to the command of the 24th Regimental District, Brecon, vice Colonel E. S. Browne, V.C., who has gone to York as A.A.G. Colonel Hare commanded a battalion of the Cheshire Regiment.

Colonel F. F. Roupell, half-pay, late East Surrey Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 6th Royal Reserve Battalion at Preston.

Colonel T. E. Stephenson, 1st Batn. Essex Regiment, has been selected by Lord Roberts for a Brigade command in the Field Force in South Africa.

Colonel P. H. Murray, half-pay, late Shropshire Light Infantry, has been appointed to the command of the 4th Regimental District, Lancaster, vice Colonel E. H. Fitzherbert, vacated.

Colonel J. H. S. Craigie, late Highland Light Infantry, A.A.G., Army Headquarters, India, is officiating in command of the Sinde District.

Colonel H. G. Grant, who has been on half pay since his return from India in July, 1897, has succeeded Colonel R. H. Murray, C.B., in command of the 72nd-79th Regimental Districts, Fort George.

Colonel P. S. Gwatkin, I.S.C., who was Military Secretary to the late Sir William Lockhart, has been appointed A.A.G. Peshawur District, vice Colonel R. K. Ridgeway, V.C., vacated.

Three Lieutenant-Colonels complete their terms of command next month, viz., Lieut.-Colonels H. J. Aylmer, 16th Lancers, on April 1; W. F. Curteis, 2nd Batn. Cheshire Regiment, on April 21; and W. W. Ward, 2nd Batn. East Yorkshire Regiment, on April 29. All three officers are on active service in South Africa.

Lieut.-Colonel H. S. Money-Graham, Retired List, R.A., has passed at headquarters Ireland as Officiating D.A.A.G. during the present emergency.

Lieut.-Colonel W. H. Daniel, retired list, late East York Regiment, has passed at Aldershot for temporary employment as D.A.A.G.

Lieut.-Colonel W. Heaten, retired list, late South Wales Borderers, has been appointed to the command of the 10th Royal Reserved Batn. at Belfast.

Lieut.-Colonel H. T. W. Allcott, retired list, late of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, has been appointed to the command of the 1st Royal Reserve Batn. at Aldershot.

Major N. Legge, D.S.O., 20th Hussars, had vacated the appointment of Brigade-Major to the Inspector-General of Cavalry when the mail left India, and had been succeeded by Major C. P. Campbell, 1st Central India Horse, who was first named for the post.

Major Morse, 2nd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment, takes up on Thursday next the duties of Superintendent of Recruiting at Leeds.

Major C. A. de P. Burroughs, retired list, late 1st Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed Commandant of the West African Regiment.

Major L. L. Nicol, Rifle Brigade, whose term of appointment as Adjutant of the 7th Batn. would expire in August next, has been selected to succeed Colonel Davidson, transferred to St. George's Barracks, as Superintending Officer of Recruiting in Birmingham.

Mr. A. H. Gunter, Indian Civil Service, the District Judge at Peshawur, who was murdered by a mad fanatic on Sunday last, was a young administrator of great ability. He had held for the last two years the important post of Deputy-Commissioner of Bannor, on the Waziri frontier, necessitating incessant vigilance, and had previously been for two years in the Secretariat. He served as Assistant Political Officer with Sir Bindon Blood's Force in the campaign of 1897, for which he obtained the medal and clasp. He was a son of Lieut.-Colonel E. Gunter, late D.A.A.G. for Instruction S.E. District, whose many friends in the service will sympathise with him in this tragic termination to his son's career of brilliant promise. Mr. Gunter had been eight years in the Indian Civil Service, and was shortly to have proceeded home on furlough.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, March 24.

In a telegram despatched last night to the War Office, Lord Roberts stated that there was no special news to report. The country south of Bloemfontein was generally settling down. Numbers of arms had been delivered up, and the people were beginning to recognise the advantage of bringing in supplies for sale. The movements of the troops in the western district were being attended with good results.

Telegraphing this evening, Lord Roberts reported that an unfortunate mishap occurred on Friday to four officers—Lieut.-Col. Crabbe, Capt. Trotter, and Lieut. Lygon, Grenadier Guards, and Lieut.-Col. Codrington, Coldstream Guards—who were riding eight or nine miles beyond their camp on the Modder River without escort, except a single trooper. They were fired at by a party of Boers; Lieut. Lygon was killed, and all the other members of the party were wounded. The Boers took them to the nearest farmhouse, where they were attended to. They were subsequently conveyed to Bloemfontein, and are doing well. An unofficial account of the affair said:—

"A curious and deplorable incident has occurred about twelve miles away from Bloemfontein. Lieut.-Col. Crabbe, Lieut.-Col. Codrington, Capt. Trotter, and Lieut. the Hon. E. Lygon, with an orderly accompanying them, while riding in the neighbourhood of the camp espied five Boers. Though almost unarmed the officers at once gave chase, and the Boers rode off at full speed and took refuge on a kopje where three other Boers were already stationed. The Boers, opening fire on their pursuers, within a few minutes succeeded in killing Lieut. Lygon and wounding all the other members of the party. On one of the wounded officers waving a white handkerchief, the Boers left the kopje, dressed our men's wounds, and carried them to a neighbouring farmhouse, behaving throughout with the most humane consideration. All are doing well, but Capt. Trotter's wound is serious."

The death of Major-Gen. Sir Edward Woodgate from the effects of wounds received in action at Spion Kop on Jan. 24 was reported from Mooi River.

Sunday, March 25.

A cavalry reconnaissance was made from Bloemfontein towards Brandfort to-day. The 16th Lancers by skirmishing drew the Boers from their position into the open, when the 9th Lancers attempted to outflank the enemy while engaged from the front by a dismounted section of the 16th Lancers. Our casualties few.

Telegraphing from Bloemfontein during the evening the Times correspondent stated that the conditions existing in the occupied territory render imperative the somewhat prolonged halt at Bloemfontein. It is necessary that the effect of the proclamation should have time to make itself felt, and danger of annoyance to the line of communications may be apprehended unless the territory behind the advancing forces is rendered absolutely secure. The military régime is being conducted with great smoothness, but recent investigations show that caution must be exercised in dealing with persons apparently loyal.

Monday, March 26.

A small force under Lieut.-Col. Pilcher entered Ladybrand during the morning after driving in the Boer outposts. The enemy attacked in strength, and Col. Pilcher retreated, taking with him the Landdrost.

According to semi-official information from the Transvaal, President Kruger is determined to continue fighting to the end, though many burghers are beginning to be very doubtful as to the use of doing so. Provisions, except groceries, are still plentiful in the Transvaal. In spite of the publication of official Boer figures as to their losses, trustworthy informants agree that about 2,000 Boers have been killed in action since the outbreak of the war. Including wounded, sick, and prisoners, their total loss must, on the most moderate estimate, exceed 15,000, without reckoning several thousand Free Staters and rebels who have returned to their farms. It is doubtful whether the Republics can now muster 30,000 men to oppose Lord Roberts's and General Buller's advance.

Great popular indignation is said to be felt at Bloemfontein (says the correspondent of the Daily Telegraph) against President Kruger for issuing the proclamation annexing the State to the Transvaal and menacing the burghers who accept Lord Roberts's terms. Ex-President Steyn protested strongly against this step. The late allies are now bitter foes. So strong is popular feeling that, were it desirable, a large body of Free State burghers would take the field and fight immediately against their late allies, independent of what they consider their rights, as President Kruger, they recognise, has simply made use of them to serve his own ends.

Tuesday, March 27.

There was no news from Lord Roberts to-day.

The death of Gen. Joubert, announced from Pretoria, to the great regret of all ranks of the British Army, who had learnt to recognise his merits as a Commander and humane conduct in all situations.

The full text of a report from Col. Baden-Powell has been received in London through Bulawayo. Writing on Tuesday, the 13th inst., the gallant commander at Mafeking said:—"All well here. During past few days cordon been much relaxed. Our patrols have been active, rushing one entrenchment and putting an effective fire into the gorge of the next. We captured 26 head of the enemy's cattle and killed 12 Boers. Our loss was two killed and three wounded. Webb, of the Cape Police, has been killed during reconnaissance. He had a narrow escape the day before."

Lieut.-Gen. Sir George White was presented with an address by the Mayor of Cape Town. The Central News correspondent says:—

"In acknowledging the token of the citizens' goodwill, he delivered an eloquent speech. At the outset he thanked the citizens on his own behalf, and as the representative of the gallant garrison of Ladysmith. He proceeded to explain the reasons why he allowed the late General Sir W. Penn Symons to strike the first blow at the advancing enemy. The Boers, he said, then had overweening confidence, engendered by having been successful in some small engagements like Majuba, aided as they were by a combination of fortuitous circumstances. This confidence, however, was very soon shattered by the brilliant victories of General Symons and General French at Talana Hill or Elands Laagte. These engagements showed the Boers that British soldiers could push them from the strongest positions at the point of the bayonet, despite their superior numbers. War, however, General White pointed out, was a game of 'ups and downs.' He decided to make an effort to defeat absolutely the Boers, and he was just about to put it into execution when the unfortunate disaster at Nickolson's Nek occurred. Nickolson's Nek, he explained, was the only outlet through which his cavalry could go to conclude the work of the infantry. Everything depended upon holding that position. The plan failed, and he alone took the responsibility. He afterwards decided to hold Ladysmith as a shield to protect the colony, confident as he was that the 'great sleepy giant,' who they knew was behind them, would ultimately waken, stretch out his arms, and rescue them. He referred at some length to the repulse of the Boers on January 8, and specially eulogised the services rendered by Colonel Ian Hamilton. As an instance of the bravery of the troops on that occasion, he said that sixteen soldiers of the Manchester Regiment held a position without any officers to guide and direct them, from three o'clock in the morning until nightfall. When the roll call was taken after the enemy had been completely beaten back, fourteen of those brave men were found to have been killed, another was wounded, and only one escaped unscathed. He gave as another instance the gallantry of Sergeant Hope, of the Royal Artillery. As his battery was going into action he was struck by a shell, which carried away his arm and leg. As his helpless and almost lifeless body fell across the trail of the gun, he urged his comrades to do their duty, and shouted to them, 'Throw me out of the way, boys.' Sir George declared that General Joubert was a soldier, a gentleman, and a brave and honourable opponent. The Imperial Light Horse, recruited in the colony, was the finest fighting material that he ever had under his command. In conclusion, Sir George White expressed his thanks to the civil community of Ladysmith, who were as anxious as the military to hold up the grand old flag of England."

Sir Alfred Milner arrived at Bloemfontein in the evening.

Lord Kitchener's column returned from Prieska to De Aar on Tuesday, having received the submission of about 200 rebels. Others decamped across the Orange River.

A large Boer force attached the British position at Warrenton at daybreak, but only one man was wounded on our side, though some horses and cattle were killed.

of Fauresmith, and stating that a nine-pounder gun and a Martini Maxim were discovered there in a mine-shaft, and also a large quantity of ammunition which had been buried. Arms are being gradually surrendered, and the inhabitants are settling down.

Reuter correspondent wrote from Bloemfontein that Boer patrols had been seen near Brandfort. The military authorities have discovered half-a-million's worth of realisable securities in the Government's chest.

Friday, March 30.

There was little fresh news. Gen. Joubert's funeral was to have taken place to-day. The British officers at Pretoria have sent a wreath of flowers as a tribute of their admiration, respect, and regret.

All discharges by purchase from Militia units, whether embodied or disembodied, are suspended until further orders.

It has been decided to increase the firing accommodation at the Bulford Camp, Salisbury Plain, by the addition of six targets to each of the present ranges.

Orders are promulgated with reference to the Government's decision to extend the Volunteer camps this year to twenty-eight days. The regulations are framed in a generous spirit, and "the Commander-in-Chief trusts that Volunteer commanding officers will appeal to the patriotism of all ranks under their command to attend in large numbers, and to remain as long as possible in camp, so as to avail themselves of this opportunity of gaining instruction."

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SOLDIERS' INSTITUTES.

The Annual Meeting of this Association was held at the Church House, the Rev. Dr. Edghill, in the chair. The report showed that nine institutes were established and at work—a tenth is to be built at once at Shorncliffe Camp, and an eleventh is projected on Salisbury Plain. Grants during the year had been made of £1,698 from the General Fund towards founding institutes, besides £1,777 received for special institutes and paid over in toto. The total receipts had been £1,966, and the working expenses £280, for the year 1899.

In his opening address the Chaplain-General said that the report showed progress everywhere. The Diocese of Exeter, for instance, is actually paying for a chaplain out at the front in South Africa, to help look after their soldiers. The Church has begun to realise her duty towards soldiers, and if the Church is to touch the democracy, the best thing is to begin with the Army.

Col. R. H. Jelf, C.M.G., moved the adoption of the report and statement of accounts, and, speaking for his own garrison of Colchester, was thankful for the help given by the Association. Although their plans had been much upset by the removal of regiments to the war, still their Institute was in constant use and employment.

Lieut.-Col. F. O. Barrington Foote seconded the resolution, and emphasised the Chaplain-General's remarks as to the harmony that had distinctly reigned wherever soldiers' institutes were in existence. He also rejoiced that these institutes were becoming more numerous for the sake of continuity in garrison life. The institutes were managed on the same lines everywhere, so that a man seeing Church of England Soldiers' Institute over the door knew at once the home-like surroundings he would find within the building, also what he might or might not do therein, and what are the privileges and regulations. Speaking of his own Institute at Woolwich, Col. Foote was glad to report that they had added a splendid concert and entertainment room thereto at a cost of £2,000, all of which had been paid. Then as to the human side of the work. In January no less than 1,500 letters were written in the small writing room. On Sundays there is no cooking, and only penny articles of food are sold, but on a recent Sunday evening £3 10s. worth of penny things were consumed, which represents a very large number of men coming in for wholesome food instead of spending their money less usefully. An average of fourteen men came to daily prayers, and of thirty to fifty to the Wednesday Guild meeting. Then hymn singing on Sunday evening is delightful, and affords a great chance for making friends. Some people in going over the Institute remark, "I do not see much religion going on here;" especially is this said in the billiard room. The answer is, that if anyone drops in at stray and unexpected times, he will never hear a word of bad language. If soldiers are taught to be self-controlled and guard their language, and if the whole atmosphere of the place induces to good, is not that religious work? Then again, songs are sung in the concert room which are often of a frivolous description, but nothing is allowed that is not perfectly clean and pure.

The Rev. W. H. Kewley, chairman of the Salisbury Committee, thanked the Association for the £50 granted for their Canvas Institute. They had raised nearly £700 locally, but were stuck for the last £70, so that the grant just about pulled them through. The work which the Institute were able to do last summer was remarkable indeed. At Bulford Camp Institute there were an average of 600 letters a day written. All on the spot were struck with the appreciation shown by the soldiers at the efforts made by the Diocese on their behalf. The local committee were most anxious that the permanent institute should be built at the same time as the new barracks. An appeal had been made for £2,000, but he (Mr. Kewley) thought it should be put at £3,000 to provide an adequate building. The Canvas Institutes will have to be used again this year, as there are 17,000 troops expected to be at Salisbury Camp, mainly Militia and Volunteers. They in Salisbury are full of gratitude to the Association, and are glad to co-operate with it. Having got accustomed to the soldier they have found him a good fellow, much better than the people of Salisbury Plain were disposed to expect. They were now changing their opinion entirely, and find the soldier ready and willing to be helped by those who show sympathy and kindness.

The report was adopted, and elections to the executive committee took place, on which the two new members are Lieut.-Gen. H. Geary, C.B., and Rev. A. W. Watson, Chaplain to the Forces.

It has been decided that the Royal Military Repository at Woolwich shall be abolished as soon as practicable after May 1. All instructional courses for redrilling the permanent staff of Militia and Volunteer Artillery are to be suspended from that date till Oct. 1, except at the Leith School of Instruction, which will proceed as usual.

UNCLAIMED SOLDIERS' MONEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Mr. Kipling, in his stirring verses, describes the average British soldier as an "Absent-minded Beggar," and probably he is not very far wrong. An instance of such absent-mindedness is given in a letter published in the Press some years ago. "A Soldier" wrote as follows complaining of the little publicity given to the lists of soldiers' unclaimed balances:—

"A soldier dies. The chances are he has made no will, and that the address of his relatives is unknown. He has saved a few pounds. What is to be done with them? The fact of his death and the particulars of the money are advertised. But in what? In a daily paper that is likely to come under the notice of his relatives or friends? No! but in the "Army List." And how many of the relatives of the rank and file ever see this interesting work? Not one in a hundred."

He then gives the result of seventy-one cases after repeated publication in the "Army List." Only nine representatives put in claims. It is not surprising therefore to find that since the passing of the Regimental Debts Act, 1863, no less than £155,033 has been handed over to the Patriotic Fund Commissioners for distribution among other soldiers' widows and orphans. Few persons realise the fact that it is possible for even a "private" soldier to save money. The following cases are extracted from some recent lists of unclaimed balances:—

Pte. John Sherry	207	13	10
Sergt. M. O'Meara	325	15	2
Col. A. F. Connell	153	13	9
Sapper William Smith	159	1	7
Pte. George Lovelock	117	5	0
Sergt. David Galt	295	9	0
Band-Sergt. Charles E. Farrell ...	258	16	6

The late Sir Walter Barttelot, M.P., moved for a return of these unclaimed soldiers' balances before they were handed over to the Patriotic Fund Commissioners, and he succeeded in obtaining a return for seven years only, but the Government declined to publish it owing to its great length. Surely the length of the document conclusively proved the need of greater publicity? If the particulars now published in the London Gazette and Army List were advertised in newspapers likely to be seen by soldiers' kin, many families would be the richer. Moreover, on the fact becoming widely known that it is possible for even "absent-minded" Tommy Atkins to save money, a great spur to recruiting—just now much wanted—would be given. One word more. The Government has in hand the sum of £76,803 in respect of the balance of unclaimed army prize money. Why should not the names of persons entitled to £10 and upwards be published?

ARMY RECRUITING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The following plan might help to get the most desirable kind of recruits for the increased establishment that has been voted for the Army. Let every man who, within a certain time of joining, shows proficiency in military exercises, and obtains a certain school certificate, be taught a trade. Let these men be employed increasing the comfort of the Army generally. Dividing up barrack rooms with cubicles, and perhaps adding refectories and swimming baths. Some could be taught market gardening, and grow things which could be sold to soldiers and their families at wholesale rates. All the expenditure involved would be amply met by the fact that with an Engineer officer in command of a company of tradesmen, and in charge of works, the now so costly R.E. Department could be reduced to a mere central direction of works. Such a plan is, of course, particularly suited to an Army like ours, whose system of enlistment makes it necessary to keep men a long time with the colours, to maintain the establishments, and far longer than is necessary to train a diligent man as a soldier; it would be limited only by the fact that it should always remain a privilege to be trained in a trade, so that diligence in military and voluntary work could be obtained of those who are. On a large scale, however, it would present difficulties, both military and social. Service in climates where Europeans cannot work would then be a serious problem for solution. Many different trades would have to be taught; besides those above-mentioned, regiments would have to make different ones specialties, according perhaps to the industry of their districts, and their movement might be somewhat restricted to stations where the plant exists for their work. An interested outcry would inevitably be raised in the trades, backed by all the malcontents whose object is to spread the belief that our social system is so rotten that evil can result in it of teaching men to be skilful and diligent workmen. The experiments would therefore be better tried on a scale that would involve no difficulties, and give no more excuse for complaint than does the fact of soldiers cooking their own meals. UNIQUE.

WHERE TO GO AT EASTER.—If the consensus of opinion of celebrities like Napoleon, Tennyson, Ruskin be worth anything, then Torquay is the most picturesque place in England, and especially attractive at Easter, for, being the Italy of England, it will be warm at Torquay if it is warm anywhere. Apart from scenic superiority and warmth, it has countless attractions in beautiful walks and drives, sea and landscapes, pier, pinewoods, and acres of pleasure grounds facing the sea. At Easter, Torquay may be said to be en fete, for, besides the theatre, Palm Court, concerts, bands, golfing, cycling, boating, lawn tennis, roller skating, &c., it will have its steeplechases for valuable prizes. It is accessible from London in 5 hours; Manchester 8 hours; York, 8½ hours; Newcastle, 11 hours; Bradford, 9 hours; Leeds, 8½ hours; and Birmingham, 5½ hours. The Great Western Railway, with its accustomed liberality, makes special arrangements with other lines for passengers to travel to Torquay from many parts of the Kingdom at reduced fares. West-End tickets are issued and excursion trains run, consequently everything points to Torquay as the place of places at this season.

The Patriotic Fund Commissioners have decided to grant pensions to all widows of soldiers and sailors who took part in the Russian war and who were married before March 30, 1856. The concession will affect about 200 widows living at Portsmouth.

Obituary.

ARMY.

Field-Marshal Sir Donald Martin Stewart, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., C.I.E., died at Algiers at 3.30 a.m. on Monday, having gone there recently from Chelsea Hospital for the benefit of his health, which had been failing since his recent severe attack of influenza. Reuter's correspondent, telegraphing on Monday morning, said:

At midday yesterday Sir Donald Stewart grew much worse, and a few hours later it was evident that the end was approaching. After a period of syncope he recovered consciousness towards two o'clock in the morning, and recognised those who were at his bedside, addressing a few words to his wife, son, and daughter. The aged Field-Marshal breathed his last at half-past three. Capt. Donald Stewart, British Resident at Kumasi, son of Sir Donald, telegraphed at once to the Queen, and then to the War Office, Lord Salisbury, and Lord Curzon. The Field-Marshal succumbed to asthma, from which he had been suffering for some time. The body was to be placed in the English Church in Upper Mustapha, pending removal to England. In the absence of the Governor-General of Algeria the General Secretary to the Government has expressed his condolences to the family.

Sir Donald Stewart was born March 21, 1824, and was educated at Aberdeen University. Joining the Indian Army Oct. 12, 1840, he was appointed to the 9th Bengal N.I. March 5, 1841, becoming Lieutenant, Jan. 3, 1844, Captain, June 1, 1854, Brevet-Major, Jan. 19, 1858, Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel, July 28, 1858. On the formation of the Staff Corps in 1861, he was appointed to it as substantive Major; obtained the rank of Colonel, July 20, 1863; Major-General, Dec. 24, 1868; Lieutenant-General, Oct. 1, 1877; General, July 1, 1881; and was created a Field-Marshal May 26, 1894. He first saw Staff Service as D.A.A.G. Delhi Field Force, July 2 to Dec. 29, 1857; was A.A.G. Headquarters, Bengal, 1857-62; D.A.G. Headquarters, Bengal, 1862-67; Brigadier-General, Abyssinia, 1867-68; Brigadier-General, Bengal, 1868-69; Governor of the Andamans, 1869-76; Major-General, Bengal, 1876-78; Lieutenant-General commanding Southern Afghanistan, 1878-80; Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, 1880-81; Commander-in-Chief in India, 1881-85; and Member of Council of India, 1885-95, and from 1895 to the time of his death. He was appointed Governor of Chelsea Hospital, March 6, 1885. In 1854-5 Capt. Stewart served in campaigns against the hill tribes on the Peshawur frontier, gaining mention in despatches. But his first chance of real distinction came with the Mutiny. Its outbreak found him in command of a company of the 9th Bengal Infantry at Aligarh, which joined the mutineers. Communication between Agra and Calcutta was still maintained, but had ceased between Agra and Delhi, and the Upper Provinces were thus practically cut off. Capt. Stewart resolved to get through to Delhi somehow in order to seek active employment there, and he informed Mr. Colvin, the Lieutenant-Governor, of his intentions. The peril was obvious to every one, but Mr. Colvin was glad enough to find someone who would undertake to carry important despatches. Capt Stewart accordingly started, and fell in with a civilian, Mr. Ford, who had two good horses. The two made their way to Delhi in the end, but their ride is worthy of an honourable place in the thrilling story of the Mutiny. Again and again they only just escaped destruction; once they actually found themselves in a village where some mutineers were encamped, and only escaped through the help of a loyal taksildar, who contrived to convey them out in secrecy. Even when they reached Delhi the prospect was almost as menacing; the enemy's pickets and scouting parties were all around them, and once more they owed their safety to a native, a repentant budmash, who got them through to the British lines, though they had to bluff a patrol of the enemy which they encountered on the way. Capt. Stewart at once received a staff appointment, and, first as D.A.A.G., afterwards as A.A.G., served through the siege of Delhi, at the taking of Lucknow, and through the Rohilkund campaign. Promotion and mentions in despatches, as well of course, as the medal with two clasps, rewarded these services. In 1867 Col. Stewart commanded the Bengal Brigade in the Abyssinian campaign, and was for some time in command at Zulla. It was largely owing to him, in conjunction with the future Lord Roberts, that the plan of sending off each regiment thoroughly equipped with transport and stores on its own ship was now first adopted. The amount of delay and confusion on landing this saved it would be difficult to over-estimate. The despatches again made high mention of him, and he received his C.B., and the Abyssinian medal. After a brief period in command of the Peshawur Brigade, he became Chief Commissioner of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands. In the Andamans he introduced a number of useful reforms into the penal system, and took the first steps towards the change which subsequently rendered it possible for "lifers," who were not professional criminals, to secure release at the end of 20 years. His tenure of office was saddened by the assassination of Lord Mayo at Port Blair almost before his eyes. In 1876 he received the command of the Meean Meer Division. Then came the Afghan campaign, in which he achieved his most splendid feats. He commanded the Southern Field Force sent to capture Kandahar when hostilities with Shere Ali had begun, and carried out the difficult piece of work triumphantly. The march through the Bolan and over the Khojak, where there was practically no road, and with enormous transport difficulties, was very trying, and its success was a most notable event. It was followed up by most tactful conduct in the work of pacifying Southern Afghanistan, in which he wisely availed himself of the services of all the existing officials whom he could trust. The murder of Cavagnari and the consequent renewal of hostilities left Southern Afghanistan comparatively quiet, thanks to his firm grip. He had now to make his magnificent march from Kandahar to Kabul, through a country bristling with hostility, absolutely cut off from any base or line of communications, and with the battles of Ahmed Khel and Urzoo to fight on the way. It was a splendid achievement. Subsequently, he held supreme command in Afghanistan, despatched Lord Roberts on his march to Kandahar, where the relaxation of Stewart's grip had been followed by disaster, played an important part in the task of establishing Abdur Rahman Khan as Ameer, and finally carried out a most brilliant and bloodless withdrawal of 6,000 men from Afghanistan. His unselfishness in leaving to Roberts the splendour of the great march deserves especial mention. For his earlier services in Afghanistan he had received the thanks of Parliament and his K.C.B.; he now again received the thanks of Parliament, his G.C.B., and a baronetcy. Towards the end of 1880 he became a Member of the Viceroy's Council, and in the following year was promoted to the rank of General and appointed Commander-in-Chief in India. On the expiration of his command in 1885, he received the exceptionally warm thanks of the Viceroy, Lord Dufferin, and returned home to become a Member of the Council of India. Sir Donald Stewart was a D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of his own University. He married, in 1867, Marina, daughter of Commander T. D. Dabine, R.N., and leaves two sons and three daughters. His eldest son, Col. N. R. Stewart, who succeeds to the baronetcy, was born Sept., 1851. The younger son, Capt. Donald William, C.M.G., served in the Gordon Highlanders, was severely wounded on the march from Kabul to Kandahar, served in the Boer war, at Suakin, and as Political Officer with the Ashanti expedition of 1895-6, having previously taken the ultimatum to Prempi. He is now British Resident at Kumasi. The remains were removed on Tuesday from Mustapha to Algiers and deposited in the vaults of the English church. The funeral procession included several detachments of troops, all the officers of the General Staff, and the Consular body. The chief mourners were Capt. Stewart, son; Mr. St. Hay Newton, the British Consul; Gen. Grissot, commanding the 19th Army Corps; and Capt. Leve, representing the Governor-General of Algeria. The coffin was wrapped in the Union Jack, and the funeral car was covered with the British and French flags. The spectators all along the entire route uncovered as the cortege passed. H.M.S. Juno left Gibraltar on Wednesday to convey the remains of the deceased Field-Marshal to England.

Major-General Sir Edward Woodgate, K.C.M.G., C.B., died at Mooi Hospital, Natal, on the evening of the 23rd inst. He was dangerously wounded in his forehead by a shell at Spion Kop on Jan. 24, when in command of the Lancashire Brigade under Sir Charles Warren, and his recovery was hardly expected at that time. But, after an operation by Dr. Treves, and his subsequent removal to Mooi Hospital, he appeared to improve, and his friends and relations considered him to be so far out of danger that they were expecting him home in the summer. However, it appears that paralysis suddenly supervened towards the end of last week, and the gallant officer gradually sunk. Sir Edward Woodgate was the second son of the late Canon Woodgate, Rector of Belbroughton, and was educated at Rugby and Sandhurst. He was born in 1845, and entered the Army as an ensign in the 4th King's Own Regiment in 1865. He first saw active service under Lord Napier in the Abyssinian War in 1868, being present at the capture of Magdala, when he carried the colours of his regiment. He was engaged in the Ashanti War of 1873-74, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, and took part in the battle of Amoafu, and was mentioned in despatches. He served as staff officer in the Zulu War of 1879, and was present at the battle of Ulundi (medal with clasp and brevet of Major). From 1880 to 1885 he was Brigade-Major in Jamaica, and commanded the 1st Batn. 4th Regiment from 1893 to 1897. On the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee he was made a Companion of the Bath. In 1897-98 he commanded the 4th Regimental District, and in the latter year was sent on special service to take command of the troops in Sierra Leone, in which colony the tribes were in a state of rebellion. Col. Woodgate suppressed the revolt, and captured the rebel chief Bey Buri. He was invalided home in Feb., 1899, and in the following June was created a C.M.G. in recognition of his services on the West Coast, being promoted K.C.M.G. in January last. He commanded the 17th Regimental District from July to November last year, when he was appointed to command the 9th Brigade of the 5th Division (Sir Charles Warren's) in South Africa. In the operations for the relief of Ladysmith Sir Edward Woodgate was selected to attack Spion Kop. In this engagement he was severely wounded, but despite his wounds he persisted in leading his men, until he was forcibly placed on the stretcher by order of the medical officer.

Col. Lacy Bowring Bance, retired list, I.S.C., died suddenly at 185, Piccadilly, W., on the 27th inst., aged 61. He joined the Army, Sept. 10, 1856; became Captain, Sept. 10, 1868; Major, Sept. 10, 1876; Lieutenant-Colonel Sept. 10, 1882; and Colonel, Sept. 10, 1886. He was present at the capture of Copul on June 1, 1858; served with the Bellary Moveable Column under Brigadier Spottiswoode in 1858 (medal); served in the Afghan war, 1880 (medal), and served with the Burmese Expedition, 1886-88 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp).

Col. Martin Pierce Blake, retired list, late 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers), of Holly Park, co. Galway, died at Brighton on the 27th inst. Born Feb. 17, 1839, he joined the Army, March 23, 1860; became Lieutenant May 17, 1861; Captain Feb. 1, 1868; Major Oct. 31, 1871; Lieutenant-Colonel October 1, 1873; and Colonel Nov. 7, 1884.

Lieut.-Col. Lionel Septimus Henry James, Major retired list Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, died at Hyères on the 10th inst., aged fifty-seven. He joined the Army Dec. 11, 1858; became Captain Aug. 1872; Major Feb. 1, 1880; and retired with the hon rank of Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 15, 1887.

Major George James Maillard, Captain, retired list, 17th Regiment, died at Southsea, on the 25th inst., aged fifty-seven. He joined the Army April 9, 1861; became Lieutenant May 31, 1864; Captain March 25, 1871; and retired with the rank of Major Oct. 10, 1882.

Major Samuel Dicken Nichols Grinsell, Quartermaster, retired list, late of the Royal West Kent Regiment, has just died at his residence in Dean Terrace, Edinburgh, at the age of sixty-four. He was promoted Quartermaster Aug. 9, 1871; became Captain Aug. 9, 1881; and retired with the hon. rank of Major June 28, 1882. He served in the campaign of 1854-5; in the Crimea, being present at the battle of Inkerman and the siege of Sebastopol (medal with two clasps and Turkish medal). He also took part in the New Zealand War, 1863 to 1866, including the actions at Rangiawhia, Nukumar, and Kakarama (medal).

Capt. Arthur William Curtis, R.A., died at Ladysmith on the 9th inst., of enteric fever. Born March 3, 1870, the second son of the Rev. G. J. Curtis, Rector of Coddington, Ledbury, he joined the Army Feb. 14, 1890; became Lieutenant Feb. 14, 1893; and Captain, Jan. 23 last. He served in the Isazai expedition, 1892.

"The list contained in your correspondent's letter as to the brigading of regiments in Lord Roberts's army furnishes what I submit may be taken as a very satisfactory reason for the removal of the Highland Light Infantry from the Highland Brigade, a circumstance that has given rise to some adverse comment. This is, that an opportunity was taken to place them in a Light Brigade, including the other light infantry regiments, the Cornwall and Shropshire, the old 46th and 85th. With the latter of these and the 68th (now Durham) it was that the 71st was first trained as a light infantry regiment at Ashford, Kent, about the year 1809, the three battalions subsequently forming the Light Brigade of the army sent to Walcheren, while the 46th, although the regiment only became light infantry when amalgamated with the 32nd in 1881, had a light company in the American war, who dyed their feathers red as a distinguishing mark in order that others might not suffer from the determination of the enemy to give that particular company no quarter after the manner in which they had suffered in a night attack carried out mainly by it. Under any circumstances, unprejudiced persons will fail to see that it is less distinguished to serve in the Light Brigade than in the Highland Brigade of a British Army."

Capt. Noyes has arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Black Watch (73rd).—2nd Lieut. the Hon. M. C. A. Drummond has arrived home from South Africa, invalided.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Lieut. Hall has arrived home from South Africa, invalided.

The Marchioness of Waterford wishes to thank all those who so generously contributed, and to say that she was able to send out altogether 440 shirts, jerseys, vests, and cardigans, 2,633 pairs of socks, 400 tins cocoa, bovril, &c., 121lb. tobacco, 110 pipes, 936 pairs bootlaces, 282 caps, 117 comforters, over 2,000 pocket handkerchiefs, and a large variety of other things.

Connaught Rangers (94th).—Major Hume is appointed Commandant of the standing camp at Kailana for the ensuing season.

Army Veterinary Department.—Capt. Jessel asked the Under-Secretary of State for War the other day if he could explain why the vacancy which occurred in November last in the rank of Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel had not been filled up, and whether it is usual to keep open appointments in the higher ranks for so long a period. Mr. Wyndham stated that there is no officer at present qualified under the regulations.

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in zinc non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

He served in the Dongola Expedition, 1896 (medal and Egyptian medal with clasp).

Lieut. the Hon. Edward Hugh Lygon, 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards, was killed in the neighbourhood of the Modder River on the 23rd inst. He was the second son of Frederick, sixth Earl Beauchamp, by his first wife, Lady Mary Catherine Stanhope, daughter of the fifth Earl Stanhope, and brother and heir presumptive to the present Earl Beauchamp, Governor of New South Wales. Born July 17, 1873, he joined the Grenadier Guards from the 3rd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, June 2, 1894, and became Lieutenant Nov. 27, 1897. The Modder River has been unfortunate for him, as he was wounded there in November last, while his half-brother, the Hon. Robert Lygon, also of the 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards, was wounded at Belmont on Nov. 23. Lieut. Lygon was appointed Adjutant, vice Lieut. Fryer, killed in action at Belmont, on Nov. 24 last.

2nd Lieut. Robert Hill Kinnear, 5th Dragoon Guards, died of enteric fever at Ladysmith on the 16th inst. Born Feb. 15, 1876, he was appointed to the 5th Dragoon Guards from the 3rd Batn. Black Watch, May 20, 1899.

Reviews.

LITERATURE OF THE WAR.

Our table almost groans with the weight of literature concerning the war which has poured from the press, and shows no signs of diminishing its volume. Unfortunately, we must deal very briefly with a number of volumes, though many of them are extremely full of interest and will commend themselves. To this class belongs the Natal Campaign, by Bennet Burleigh (Chapman and Hall). Mr. Bennet Burleigh, as everyone knows, is the able and experienced correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, whose vigorous pen-pictures of his experiences in Natal have been latterly such a notable and interesting feature in the columns of that paper. Mr. Burleigh is among the most enterprising of correspondents, and at the very beginning of hostilities found the opportunity of entering the Transvaal, calling upon President Kruger, visiting the Boer camps, and investigating the condition of affairs. He even travelled down to the Natal border in a commando train, and at Standerton had, as he says, the "audacity" to get the station-master to stop General Joubert's own train, whereupon he boarded the General's own saloon, and travelled down with him to the big camp at Sandespruit. It is unnecessary to say, after this experience, that Mr. Burleigh's pages are very full of interest. He describes, with the hand of a ready writer, a great deal of what he saw in Natal, and though he appears not to have stayed for the relief of Ladysmith, he left with the certainty that it would be accomplished over the old Colenso ground, which he consistently maintained should never have been left. An appendix by Mr. McHugh completes the story. Such a book, vivid with the impressions of the moment, is sure to command, as it deserves, success.

Another book that deals with Natal, from the point of view of the defence of Ladysmith, is From Cape Town to Ladysmith (Blackwood and Sons), by that lamented writer, Mr. G. W. Stevens, who died during the siege. It is written in the style which won him such wide popularity as a brilliant descriptive writer. He was a journalist of great promise and of considerable achievement, and his impressionist pictures of the time in Ladysmith are quite characteristic of his manner. The book has already sold largely, and we have very great pleasure in recommending it.

A book of an analogous class, recording impressions by an intelligent and experienced writer is Lesson of the War, being Comments from Week to Week to the Relief of Ladysmith, by Spenser Wilkinson (Constable and Co.). We do not believe that it is possible to draw lessons from the war that are of real value with the information immediately at hand from telegraphic reports, although, of course, there is value in the appreciations of an intelligent and trained observer. Mr. Spenser Wilkinson has been daily elucidating the operations, generally with despondent comments, in the Morning Post, and he has contributed a weekly review of the war to the Morning Leader. This review has been collected to form the chapters of the volume, and appears to have been scarcely altered, for it has all the character of weekly journalism. The Boer Commander-in-Chief grasped the situation; the British Army was hampered by a lack of sound strategy and of sound tactics; Lord Roberts is revealing to his countrymen the nature of fundamental principles. This is the line of Mr. Spenser Wilkinson's comments which, for the rest, many will be very glad to have in book form.

The Fight for the Flag in South Africa, by Edgar Sanderson (Hutchinson and Co.), is a thin volume recording the operations up to the advance of Lord Roberts, carefully and intelligently compiled, well written, and abundantly illustrated from drawings by Messrs. Caton Woodville, Melton Prior, Stanley L. Wood, Seppings Wright, and others. Not less than three books are devoted to lives of soldiers, and two of them wholly to the Commander-in-Chief in South Africa. Field Marshal Lord Roberts, by Horace G. Groser (Melrose), is well written, interesting, and produced at the very cheap rate, for it is neatly bound in cloth, of 1s. Lord Roberts of Kandahar, by Walter Jerrold (Partridge and Co.), deserves commendation as being a well compiled and generally interesting book, doing much justice to Lord Roberts's career. The illustrations are tolerably good, and the portrait of the veteran Field Marshal is excellent. Our Greatest Living Soldiers, is by Charles Lowe, M.A. (Chatto and Windus), a brilliant writer of wide repute, whose present volume stands head and shoulders above many of the class. It was well worth while to reprint the newspaper articles which form this volume. The chapters are devoted to Lord Wolseley, Sir Redvers Buller, Lord Roberts, Sir Evelyn Wood, Sir George White, Sir Donald Stewart, General MacDonald, and, finally, to two Royal dukes, the Duke of Cambridge and the Duke of Connaught, and to a group of generals, including such men as Sir Francis Grenfell and Sir Baker Russell. We shall say nothing about the book, except that it justifies its author's reputation, and that each of its chapters is a capable, clever, and convincing portraiture of its subject.

The Boer States, Land, and People, by A. H. Keane (Methuen and Co.), is a volume of character and distinction. Its author is known as an authority both upon Indian history and French literature, but he has evidently been at great pains to investigate the racial conditions which are the dominant factor in the South African problem. Mr. Keane's views may not commend themselves to every reader, but all must recognise that he has entered upon an earnest and interesting study. He has gone back to the beginning, showing us the racial elements of the Boers—Dutch, French, and German—moulded in their new environment. There can be no doubt that the Boers are a race apart, and have many qualities in them that go to the making of peoples, as well as to the establishment of States. It is, therefore, extremely useful to have such a study as Mr. Keane has presented to us. He admires the Boers, and yet recognises to the full a certain mental obliquity which characterises them, producing in them that peculiar element of subtlety known popularly as "sliminess," upon which they pride themselves. Mr. Keane is not well pleased with the manner in which we have treated the Boers in the past, and he argues strongly that Mr. Gladstone's policy was based upon want of knowledge, and that deplorable oversights existed in the methods by which it was given effect. Mr. Keane has just as little patience with the despotism at Pretoria as he has with the apathy which he ascribes to the Colonial Office. He is something of an admirer of Dr. Jameson, whose action he seeks to defend. It is a matter into which we shall not enter, though Mr. Keane's views on this point are not likely to command general approval.

We have also received The Transvaal in War and Peace, by Neville Edwards (Virtue and Co.), which is mostly remarkable for its many admirable illustrations. Nearly all are from photographs beautifully reproduced and depict the country and the people, the troops engaged, and the incidents that have attended their departure from England and their arrival in South Africa, besides many other things of interest. Mr. Edwards has succeeded in making an excellent story not about the war but about the country, the places of interest, the history of development, resources, and other such matters. We have also before us The Redemption of War, sermons by Dean Paget of Christchurch, Oxford (Longmans), in which the nobility of war is ably expounded; In the Land of the Boers, by Oliver Osborne (Everett and Co.); The History of the Boer War (Methuen and Co.), a well produced volume appearing in fortnightly parts; and Cease Fire! a Story of the Transvaal War of '81, by J. Maclaren Cobban (Methuen and Co.), being a novel dealing dramatically with the events of that time by a well-known author.

SHORT NOTICES.

Records and Badges of the British Army, by H. M. Chichester, late 85th Light Infantry, and G. Burgess-Short, late Major 3rd Batn. Manchester Regt. Second Edition London (Gale and Polden). A most useful volume this, which we can recommend again to the notice of those who take an interest in Military History. Mr. Chichester unfortunately died before the first edition appeared, and Major Burgess-Short had only just completed the revision of his last proofs for the second edition when he suddenly succumbed to a long illness. But the volume before us may be regarded as a monument to their industry, and it is printed in Messrs. Gale and Polden's best style. It is embellished by a number of excellent engravings, the work of that high authority, Mr. Percy Reynolds, a guarantee of the correctness of detail.

Mr. William Tinsley, who was for many years a prominent London publisher, is about to publish his Random Recollections. These bid fair to be interesting, as Mr. Tinsley's knowledge of affairs literary, theatrical, and social note was wide and varied. He published the first books of Miss Braddon, Ouida, Mr. William Black, Mr. Justin McCarthy, and numerous other well-known writers, and was also founder of Tinsley's Magazine. The work will be in two volumes, and issued by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., in a few days.

How to Read War News (T. Fisher Unwin). The idea of this little book is very good. It proposes to inform its readers concerning persons, places, and things, mentioned in despatches and letters from the seat of war. No doubt a second edition will be better than the first, for, without denying that there is a great deal of information in the pages, we have looked for many things that we could not discover, and we found some things for which we were not prepared. The author is a little of a doctrinaire upon some points, and wastes space, for example, in discoursing about the functions and status of lieutenants in the Navy which might have been devoted to saying something concerning Springfield Junction, Warrenton, and other places, or about Boer commandants whose names appear rather frequently in the papers.

THE CAVALRY BRIGADIERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—What has become of Generals Babington and Brabazon, who were appointed to command Cavalry Brigades in South Africa? In the relief of Kimberley one Cavalry Brigade was commanded by Colonel Porter, a second by Colonel Broadwood, a third by Colonel Gordon, but where were the regular Cavalry Brigadiers? Of General Brabazon nothing has been heard since the war began.

A FIELD OFFICER.

[We hear that the Brigadiers Brabazon and Babington have been detached to organize the Yeomanry and Colonial Cavalry.—ED. "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."]

ROYAL ARTILLERY PROMOTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Surely under present circumstances, when such an enlarged circle of youths are being given military rank, the rule under which 2nd Lieutenants in the Royal Artillery can only be promoted after three years in that rank will work very cruelly and unfairly. In the last Gazette, of 13 Line 2nd Lieutenants promoted not one had the service of the senior Royal Artillery 2nd Lieutenant, and one of them was of less service than the whole of the Royal Artillery 2nd Lieutenants in the October "Army List," in which I am posting promotions. In that "Army List," while 131 Lieutenants of the Royal Artillery have been promoted Captain in the Garrison Artillery, only 14 2nd Lieutenants have been promoted. This is not just.

ANXIOUS FATHER.

March 22.

[We agree with you, but we do not profess to set things right, or to consider that all this is right. It may be like the War itself—inevitable.—ED. "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."]

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Might I suggest as a fitting memento of Her Most Gracious Majesty's visit to Ireland, which will be an historic event, that Her Majesty's Jubilee medal, in bronze or silver, should be conferred on all troops and police taking part in her entry into Dublin? No more valued or prized distinction could be received by them, and it would accentuate the importance of the occasion; which should prove to be the opening of a new era of prosperity to Ireland.

WITH MASTS AND YARDS.

IN the discussion which has recently taken place on the subject of the Training Squadron, its abolition or re-establishment, what may be called the voice of the Service afloat has had little direct expression. There is nothing strange about this, it being the result of the regulations which prevent officers on full pay from making their opinions known through the medium of the press. It is in order that the country may get an expression of the views of men on active service that we have suggested that a committee should be appointed to take evidence, and that officers of all grades be requested to help in the general enlightenment. We say "of all grades" because it is more than probable that many of the older officers will have a bias which may not exist in their younger comrades. The importance of the question to be decided cannot be over-estimated. It means, indeed, the whole system of training Her Majesty's Navy, so far as, what we have hitherto called, the seaman classes are concerned. It is not only ridiculous, therefore, but wicked to discuss the matter as if it was merely one relating to the composition of what we have been accustomed to style the Training Squadron. As everybody knows, who has looked into the matter at all, only a very small proportion of our officers and men went through the perfunctory kind of training given in the four masted ships which until recently formed that squadron. If the training thus given is essential to any and every seaman it is obvious that the number of masted ships must be considerably augmented. Nor is this all, for at present the system of education for the Navy is such that it does not include experience under sails as a necessity, and considerable changes must be made in the methods of training both for officers and men if it is to be made so. It is only natural, looking at the importance and probable complexity of the changes needing to be carried out (should it be authoritatively decided that mast and yard drill and exercise with sails are essential to adequate naval training) that the voice of the active Service should be heard before the step is taken. Pending, therefore, the convening of a committee to receive opinions it is interesting as an instalment to obtain the views of so prominent an officer as Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel. He has, as is generally known, recently vacated the post of Second in Command of the Mediterranean Squadron, in which office he was relieved by Lord Charles Beresford, and in the April number of the United Service Magazine he tells us what he thinks on the subject.

Sir Gerard Noel plunges into the controversy with characteristic vigour. Premising that the most prominent expressions of opinion on the subject hitherto have been "those of officers whose day has passed, or of men possessing a very limited knowledge of what is best for the Navy," he plumps at once, and as strongly as possible, for the employment of masted training squadrons. "Steamship training," he says, "how to battle with the elements at sea, is the one thing that makes the executive of the Navy supreme, and gives it a knowledge and power not to be acquired in any other way." Some people may consider that this is begging the question, since it has been clear throughout the discussions that both sides might subscribe to this statement. Everything depends, of course, upon what is meant by the phrase "seamanship training," while the Admiral's definition "how to battle with the elements at sea" still leaves one a choice of weapons. Sir Gerard Noel, however, leaves us in no doubt as to what he means. The "discipline of masts and sails," he declares, must not be relinquished until an equally effective substitute is found, and he will not admit that up to the present the Navy has been successful in this direction. Being at sea "in a steamship" will not, in Sir Gerard's opinion, assist one to attain the attributes of a seaman, nor does exercise in steamship squadrons do very much to conduce to vigilance, alacrity, readiness of resource, activity, and smart obedience of orders. "In fact, to train and bring the executive up for duties in modern warships in war time, it is better to employ them in masted ships than in the ships they have to fight." This is a strong line to take, and it may be that some of his friends will think that Sir Gerard Noel has done more harm than good to the cause by such apparently extravagant and anomalous advocacy. But the article which the Admiral has written must be read as a whole. It contains his recommendations, which are characteristically thorough. He explains clearly not only how the executive should be taught, but what should be the system of training for the engineers, the marines, and the non-combatants. He is not for one moment content with four masted ships. He wants, at least, a score in order that every officer and man may undergo "the discipline of masts and sails." Even if the position and ability of the writer were not certain to assure widespread attention for this article, its dogmatic and controversial nature could hardly fail to do so. His concluding sentence will probably range against him every member of the Navy League—"Great Britain must at all costs maintain her supremacy at sea, and as the matériel and the numbers of the personnel may be considered satisfactory, it is only by inadequate or defective training that her supremacy could be imperilled."

FRENCH SHIPS AND GUNS.

CONSIDERABLE satisfaction fills the minds of those Frenchmen who have read what General de la Roque has written in the Revue des deux Mondes, and have heard what has been said in the Chamber by M. Claudinon. It were to be wished that Mr. Goschen had been able to give a more conclusive answer to the statements made by the Deputy as to the alleged inferiority of British guns. It certainly does not appear that M. Claudinon's attempt to demonstrate this matter was conclusive. We are not inclined to believe that the French 12in. gun is 15 per cent. better in regard to dynamic energy than the British gun. Manifestly, M. Claudinon has lost sight of some factors in the problem, though we are by no means disposed to undervalue his criticism. What is certain is that his comparison takes no account of our latest gun, and that, even if his facts were admitted, our new ships would still be superior in the matter of their heaviest armament to those which France is building. The matter, however, is one that demands earnest consideration by the gunnery authorities, and it is greatly to be hoped that we shall presently learn officially what are the actual facts.

General de la Roque was formerly Director of Artillery at the Ministry of Marine in Paris, and therefore his words should carry weight. His opinion also is that the superiority of French guns is very great, and incontestable from every point of view. They are more powerful in character, he says, and more simply constructed than those of any other Power, "and in particular than those of England." We should have been more disposed to attach value to this opinion if it had not been accompanied by a clearly absurd estimate of the qualities of French warships. General de la Roque has not the least hesitation in affirming that French ships can engage our own with success, not only in equal number, but in the ratio of three to five. In other words, we suppose, the three latest French battleships will be equal in offensive and defensive power to five Magnificents. The General went on to say, contrary to what has lately been alleged by the best authorities, that the French coasts are exceptionally well defended by their batteries and by torpedoes and mines.

The late Director of Artillery is evidently a confirmed optimist, but his convictions are not shared by all French Naval critics—indeed perhaps by very few. Thus, M. de Duranti, in the Yacht, considers the statement to be too vague, and desires that at this particular moment, when the new shipbuilding programme is so much before the public, it should be treated as Utopian, since, if the members of the Legislature thought that three French ships were equal to five British, the plans of the Admiralty would not be likely to reach fulfilment. The swing of the pendulum, which lately made Frenchmen so downhearted about their Navy, seems now to be bringing them to a measure of full satisfaction. The Minister of Marine himself, in expounding the merits of the proposed new battleships to the Chamber, declared that they would be the most formidable engines of war which have ever been constructed. These opinions of various authorities are at least interesting, and deserve to be recorded.

Navy Notes.

What practical result will follow the action of the Navy League at its meeting on Wednesday will appear in time; but at least it was clearly shown by the letter of the Elswick Company that we have not yet come to the end of our resources for warship building. In letters from Sir William Armstrong, Whitworth, and Co., dated as late as the 15th inst., the firm says that so far as it is concerned "We could just now put down two or three battleships and two large cruisers if these were required." And, further, in reply to a question as to the time of delivery, they add, "We could deliver all the warships referred to within three years from the date of receiving the order." It seems rather a pity that as these vessels can be built, the services of the Elswick Company are not employed for the purpose, especially as the money required would be about the four millions which has been three times voted by the House of Commons for shipbuilding but not so used. It would, no doubt, regain for us whatever has been lost in the interval. The resolution proposed by Sir Henry Nicholson was to the effect "That this meeting protests against the statement by the First Lord of the Admiralty, that the resources of the country are unequal to further increase of naval defence," and this resolution was adopted, as well as another referring to the circumstance that the citizens of London were "dismayed at the repeated failure of the Admiralty to carry out works and constructions officially declared to be necessary." This seems to us to be a little beside the mark, seeing that, as we said last week, it was manifestly Mr. Goschen's meaning that his statement was to be taken only with certain qualifying limitations.

As important as the question of shipbuilding is that connected with the supply of guns and ammunition. In this connection the letter which Sir Charles Dilke wrote to Mr. Trower is particularly interesting, although so far as gun construction is concerned, the pith of his communication lies in the postscript. After pointing out that it had been claimed for the French naval gun that it had a superiority of velocity varying from 15 to 32 per cent., he adds:—"Since writing the above I learn that an improved 12in. is now ordered, and that the first ship to carry it will be the Irrisistible." More to the point are his remarks on the subject of explosives. He declares that at the present moment picric acid is not made in the United Kingdom, and yet picric acid is the base of all high explosives. There can be no reason why this chemical should not be manufactured in England, and the fact that it is not so made may have something to do with the scarcity of lyddite, which is virtually the same thing. There can be no question that the military authorities at the commencement of this war found that they were short of much war material and many warlike stores which were absolutely necessary. Lyddite was wanting, cordite too, and fuses for shells. In each case the War Office borrowed from the Admiralty, and only in this way were able to cover up their deficiencies.

The outcome of the transference of Naval stores to the Army has not been altogether satisfactory. In an article in the Times of Wednesday a correspondent refers to the consternation that has been caused in official circles by the discovery of a spontaneous ignition of cordite on board one of Her Majesty's ships, and he arrives at the conclusion that if such an accident occurred it must have been owing to the special nature of the particular cordite in question, and was in all probability due to impurities in that special lot because it had been hurriedly made. If we are right, the ship referred to in the Times is the Revenge in the Mediterranean, on board of which vessel some occurrence of the kind took place some little time back, but it was by no means certain that cordite was to blame in that instance; nor has it been satisfactorily proved that the cordite on board had been manufactured in a hurry. The circumstance in any case is sufficient to cause alarm and to make a thorough investigation necessary. It is obvious that the question raised is a grave one, and that it is quite possible to ensure that badly manufactured cordite shall not be distributed to our ships. If it had not been for the depletion of our reserves of military stores, it would not have been necessary to appropriate Navy material for War Office purposes, and the gist of the matter is, therefore, that in future, sufficient quantities of war material should be kept in store.

Lord Brassey in a letter to the Times pleads for further consideration of the report of the Colonial Naval authorities on Naval Reserves. He briefly reviews the circumstances which led to the conference, pointing out that the Admiralty had consented to the enrolment of a Colonial Naval Reserve, and that the matters needing special deliberation were (a) the scale of pay, and (b) the obligation to serve for six months in a ship of war. It was for the purpose of settling how best to surmount the difficulties connected with the latter point that the conference assembled. The Naval authorities suggested an alternative. It was that six months' continuous service should not be compulsory, and that drills afloat at frequent intervals should be accepted, with occasional cruising at sea for periods of two or three weeks. The alternative proposal of the committee led to observations on the best type of vessel in which the drills and instruction afloat should be given. This it was that led to a suggestion that modern cruisers should be lent by the Imperial Government, the Colonial Government being responsible for maintenance and repairs. Lord Brassey is convinced that there was no intention to advocate a scheme of defence for Australia local and separate from that afforded by the Imperial Navy. He now suggests that the Commander-in-Chief on the Australian Station should be authorised by the Admiralty to take the members of the conference into consultation, and with them to work out a plan suitable to colonial conditions.

The decision of Sir John Fisher to form a torpedo training squadron from the available vessels of the Mediterranean fleet affords further proof, were any needed, of the energy and capacity of the new Commander-in-Chief of that important station. The squadron is to comprise the Vulcan, presumably as Commodore's ship, the Polyphemus, the third-class cruiser Barham, three torpedo gunboats, five destroyers, and eight torpedo boats. The work of this squadron should afford excellent opportunities of special training in all forms of torpedo exercise which will keep the seamen well up to their duties, whilst many young lieutenants, subs, and warrant officers will obtain practice in handling the boats and destroyers. The scheme promises to be a far more extensive one than the organisation of the little flotillas of destroyers which already manœuvre in the Channel, since these vessels do not in themselves constitute a modern torpedo squadron. The parent ship is needed to supply the boats and destroyers with coal and water, to act as a moving base from which organised attacks can be carried out. The scheme should help to convince Naval officers of the old school that we have modern methods of training which promise to produce results quite as good as can be expected from a small squadron of masted cruisers.

At a meeting of the United Wards Club in the City last week an interesting paper was read by Mr. G. Haysom on the subject of "Citizens as Naval Defenders." The lecturer traced the growth of the Navy, urging that it owed its inception as an efficient fighting force to the City, whose merchants of old fostered the maritime power of the country, and whose citizens took a share in the expeditions which opened up trade and commerce. Later came the measures which placed the Navy beyond the pale of private enterprise. Then, after dwelling upon the value of the Naval service as the protector of Imperial interests and British trade, Mr. Haysom proceeded to inquire why it was that the City of London had no Naval auxiliary force. The weakness of the Navy, he considered, was its want of auxiliary forces,

The Royal Naval Reserve was the only force of the kind, and, although this contained the cream of the merchant service, it was not, in his opinion, sufficient. In 1891 the Naval Artillery Volunteers were abolished, a step that he characterised as a great blunder. The force was self-supporting, and he asked: Why should not this force be resuscitated, and designated the City of London Naval Artillery Volunteers? If the Lord Mayor would support the movement he felt certain it would prove very popular. We can sympathise with Mr. Haysom in his desire that the younger citizens of London may be provided with the opportunity of "associating themselves with the sea-arm of the defensive force of the country," but not with his proposal to resuscitate the R.N.A.V. The City has its military auxiliaries, now acquitting themselves with honour in the field, but if it really seeks closer connection with the Navy it will be wiser to find it by the provision of material than by trying to revive a force which was clearly shown to fulfil no useful purpose.

At the meeting of the Institution of Naval Architects on Wednesday next, after the address by Lord Hopetoun, the principal paper will be read by Rear-Admiral C. C. P. Fitzgerald on "The Japanese Navy." Special interest appertains to this owing to the Admiral having so recently returned home from the post of second in command on the China Station. The other papers on Wednesday are by Mr. B. Martell and Captain G. Russo, Royal Italian Navy. On Thursday the papers read will be "On Large Cargo Steamers," by Professor J. H. Biles; "The Practical Results of some Innovations in Modern Shipbuilding," by Mr. A. B. Wortley; "The Strength of Elliptical Sections under Fluid Pressure," by Captain G. W. Hovgaard; "On Yacht Measurements," by Mr. H. C. Vogt; "On the Balancing of Steam Engines," by Herr Otto Schlick; "The Engines of the corvette General Baquedane," by M. Sandison; and "On the Uniformity of Turning Moments of Marine Engines," by Professor Lorenz. On Friday also the subjects are mainly technical, and the authors of the several papers are Professors H. S. Hele-Shaw and G. H. Bryan, Major Guiseppe Rota, Royal Italian Navy, Signor Roberto Schanzer, and Mr. A. Scott Younger. The annual dinner of the institution will take place as usual on the evening of the opening day of the session.

Officers commanding regimental districts have been called upon to forward a return showing the approximate number of Militia recruits who volunteer to join their units abroad, and who fulfil the conditions of age and service for those units.

Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, A.D.C., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and the officers serving under his orders have decided to entertain Captain Hon. Hedworth Lambton and the officers of the Powerful at dinner shortly after they reach that port.

Admiral Lord Charles T. M. D. Scott's appointment as Commander-in-Chief of the Plymouth station having received the gracious approval of Her Majesty, he assumes the duties of Port-Admiral at Devonport nearly two years before that event would have happened in the ordinary course of employment, and may now retain his command for the usual period of three years. Lady Charles Scott will be the second daughter of our great island continent, Australia, to hold social sway at the Admiralty House of the western port during the latter half of the last decade of the nineteenth century.

Admiral Sir Henry F. Nicholson presided at a meeting of the Imperial Institute on Monday last, when a paper was read by Mr. H. F. Wyatt on "The Navy and the Empire." Mr. Wyatt asserted that the present strength of the Navy was demonstrably inadequate to the needs of the Empire. Successive Governments, irrespective of party, had neglected their duty regarding national defence, except when public opinion obliged them to act. Governments of all shades of politics deprecated agitation, yet when neglect was proved they asserted they could not improve matters without the aid of the people. Hence the justification of the Navy League.

Vice-Admiral Sir J. A. Fisher, Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean fleet, is, according to Malta advices, to be transferred to the Portsmouth command when it becomes vacant in August next.

Vice-Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief in China, has been invited to witness the contemplated manoeuvres of the Imperial Japanese fleet in the Far East.

Rear-Admiral Bouverie F. Clark, Director of Transports, is in future to have a military colleague, with the rank of Assistant-Quartermaster General, at the Admiralty as consulting officer for Army transport. Since the South African war commenced Rear-Admiral Clark has been aided, temporarily, in those particular duties by a Colonel from the headquarter's staff, and the appointment now assumes permanent form.

Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, senior officer in command at Devonport, directed a religious service to be held on Wednesday forenoon last, in memory of the late Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, whose remains have been brought home for interment at Ravenswood, Melrose, N.B. The flag of the deceased flag officer, which had been flying half-mast from the port-guardship Nile since his death, was finally struck under a salute of seventeen guns at the conclusion of the memorial service.

Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, late second in command of the Mediterranean fleet, was received in audience, on Thursday in last week, by His Majesty the King of Italy.

Rear-Admiral A. P. Hastings becomes Vice-Admiral by the death of Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax. Both officers were brought to court-martial in connection with the stranding of the Howe in 1892.

Captain R. W. Craigie, of the Cambridge, is now, at the age of fifty, the senior of his rank on the active list; but unless an exceptional vacancy occurs will not be promoted flag officer until the compulsory retirement of Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Bart., in March next year.

Captain J. A. Gifford, of the Comus, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last to pay off that vessel and commission the Charybdis in her place for service on the Newfoundland Fishery stations.

Captain Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, was due at Las Palmas on Thursday last, where a telegram awaited him from the Mayor of Portsmouth, asking whether Tuesday or Wednesday in Easter week would be convenient for the reception at that port of himself and those serving under his command. The Durham City Council intend to present the honorary freedom of the city to Captain Lambton, whose brother, the Earl of Durham, is the Mayor, as well as Lord Lieutenant of the county. They also propose to give the Captain of the Powerful a public reception when he arrives within the municipality. He left St. Helena on the 24th inst., and arrived at Ascension on the 26th inst., where he had the misfortune to lose, from enteric fever, one of his officers, Fleet Paymaster W. H. F. Kay who had shared the privations of beleaguered Ladysmith with his brother officers and shipmates.

Captain W. M. Moore, of the Research, is relieved after commanding that vessel since April, 1895, and will remain unemployed unless a post can be found for him in the Hydrographic department at the Admiralty. He has had but little relaxation from surveying duties since he was placed in command of the Alacrity on the Australian station, in 1876, and the large amount of scientific work he has got through in nearly a quarter of a century should not be forgotten.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, did not leave Durban for the Far East until Monday last. As he parted company from the scene of his recent arduous and most valuable services, he signalled "Good-bye to Durban, we hope by the time we get to Hong Kong the Vier Kleur will have been pulled down at Pretoria and replaced by the flag which Natal has so gallantly assisted to uphold." Every one will endorse the gallant officer's wish and trust in its eventual fulfilment.

Captain Anson Schomberg, of the Victorious, left Hong Kong for Malta on Monday last to pay off that battleship, and return home in the Revenge.

Captain Sir Alfred Jephson, who has been seriously ill in the South of France for the past three months, is now, we are glad to hear, out of danger and improving in health.

Captain R. S. D. Camming, of the Hermione, left Shanghai on Monday for Taku, on the Peiho River, in consequence of the disturbed state of the Tien-tsin district.

Captain G. H. Cherry, of the Juno, is fortunate in obtaining command of the first-class cruiser Argonaut, which he commissions on the 19th prox., to relieve Captain A. C. Clarke, of the Undaunted, after three years' service on the China station.

Captain T. P. Walker, of the Warspite, will, if report is correct, bring that flagship to England in consequence of serious engine defects, although only a year in commission. The inconvenience to Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, would be considerable, as, should her successor be the Imperieuse, she will not be ready until May. It is peculiar that the utility of these sister vessels has hitherto been largely divergent. While the Imperieuse has served nearly nine years abroad, and is now being refitted for further service, the Warspite has only completed one foreign commission and is now reported "broken down."

Captain S. A. Johnson, of the Colossus, attained the age of fifty-five on Sunday last, and is in consequence compulsorily retired. He is relieved in command by Captain J. E. C. Goodrich, who recently returned from the Pearl in the West Indies, regretted by his brother officers as well as those who have had the pleasure of serving under him.

Captain M. P. O'Callaghan assumed command of the naval cadets' training ship Britannia this week. The erection of the Cadets' College at Dartmouth is to be expedited, which will demand considerable attention from the gallant officer in addition to his ordinary duties at this important establishment. Everyone in the service knows his ability to meet such requirements.

Lieut. - Commander Warren D'Oyly, of the Thrush, arrived at Delagoa Bay on 20th inst. with a number of French-Madagascar subjects, whom he took from Europa Island, off the S.W. coast of Madagascar, where they were wrecked in December last, and remained for nearly three months.

Lieutenant Hughes Lockyer, senior Lieutenant and Navigating Officer of the Hood, about to be paid off at Chatham, has compiled a reference chart of the English Channel that should prove of great interest to those who navigate in that waterway. Lights and buoys are given, together with a general topography of the coast, and clearing marks of the several dangers are shown in clearly defined and distinct colouring to admit of the eye easily finding its way through the intricacies that abound off the southern shores of the British coast.

Midshipman Wilfrid A. Egerton, of the Doris, employed with the Naval Brigade in the Cape Colony, is, we regret to say, reported seriously ill at Kimberley with typhoid fever.

Paymaster-in-Chief J. W. M. Ashby's only son leaves shortly for South Africa with a detachment of Imperial Yeomanry. It is a long time—twenty-two years—since this veteran secretary was officially shelved, but several of his numerous friends are still with us, and will, we are sure, hope that his gallant boy may return safely to his father's pleasant residence at Battle, Sussex.

Fleet-Paymaster R. S. Hawkshaw, late of the Victorious, has been retired in consequence of continued ill-health.

Paymaster F. R. Waymouth, late secretary to Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, at Malta, is to remain temporarily at that establishment in view of further developments of the Vella scandals, Mr. Waymouth being an important witness against the delinquent ex-secretary of the dock-yard officials.

Major H. O. Perceval Wright and Captain F. E. B. Eagle, R.M.L.I. (retired), have both been appointed in their respective ranks to the Reserve of Officers of Her Majesty's Army.

Major A. G. B. Urnston, R.M.L.I., of the Powerful, who disembarked from that cruiser with the Naval Brigade and was subsequently detailed for duty with the military forces, has been invalided from South Africa.

Captain E. K. Story and Lieutenant F. S. Lindesay, R.M.L.I., embark in the Argonaut when that cruiser is commissioned on April 19 next to relieve the Undaunted in China.

Captain T. H. Hawkins, R.M.L.I., has qualified in subjects "c" and "d" for promotion to field rank.

Lieutenants W. W. Godfrey and H. F. Montgomery, R.M.L.I., relieve Lieutenants M. F. Bennett and Prescott Sandilands at the R.N. Barracks, Devonport, on the 2nd prox., after one year's service at the General Depot.

THE NAVAL DESPATCHES.

(From last night's London Gazette.)

ADMIRALTY, March 28.

Despatches, of which the following are copies, have been received from Rear-Admiral Sir Robert H. Harris, K.C.M.G., Commander-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa, reporting proceedings of Naval Brigade from the time of reaching Lord Methuen's headquarters to the Battle of Graspan:—

Doris, Simon's Bay, Dec. 4, 1899.

SIR,—In accordance with your orders I left Simon's Bay on Sunday, Nov. 19, and arrived with the Naval Brigade at Lord Methuen's headquarters at about 1 o'clock on the 22nd. On reporting myself to Lord Methuen I received orders to accompany him that afternoon to Belmont. Having to wait for transport from Orange River, which arrived very late in the evening, I could not manage to leave until the brigade had already marched some hours. Having packed waggons and harnessed mules I marched at 8.30 to Belmont. Being a long column it was necessarily a very slow march, and the mules were troublesome.

On arriving within one mile of Belmont I received orders through a staff officer to go back along the road, and to be in Belmont by 3 o'clock next morning to report myself to the General. On arriving at headquarters at 3 a.m., I received orders to communicate with Col. Hall, commanding Royal Artillery; having met him, I marched out of Belmont by road in company with Col. Hall's battery of field artillery. After clearing Belmont kopjes we turned off the road on the open veldt; day was just dawning, and we could see the top of the line of kopjes held by the enemy. We were then advancing towards the centre of his position, over very rough ground intersected with dykes. This tried our gun-mountings very severely. Unfortunately one gun capsized, but was soon righted, and I was relieved to find that there was no damage done, and that the dockyard work stood the test so well. On proceeding to higher ground a view of the Boers' position was then obtained. A long line of kopjes, which looked very much higher at dawn of day than they really were, the light being very bad indeed, and the sun coming up behind the kopjes cast dark shadows, which made it very hard to distinguish any objects. In addition to this there was a mist round the lower part of the kopjes.

Firing was now going on in our front, the Boers evidently having been repulsed. Col. Hall here turned away to his left, and to the left of the Boer position, on the understanding that I should take up a position across the railway line on higher ground, and he would soon communicate with me. This I did, but had great difficulty in taking my heavy ammunition waggons and guns across the railway line, finally succeeding. I here brought the battery into action to try the range of the extreme depth of the Boer position, but after firing a range-finding shot and not seeing it pitch, I limbered up.

Hearing heavy firing on the right of the position, and not having had any communication from Col. Hall, I determined, if possible, to get the battery in range of the large kopje, which a battery of the Royal Artillery were shelling. The guns not being mobile, and having to cover heavy ground, I was unfortunately too late to take part in shelling the top of the kopje, which the Guards carried.

I then turned to the left between two kopjes, and found the Boers on the rear kopje firing upon advancing infantry. I immediately got the battery into action, and at 1,700 yards shelled the Boers who were firing on our troops, the practice being excellent. The Boers were very soon silenced and retreated.

I received orders from the General to take my guns, if possible, on to a low kopje about 800 yards from my front, so as to shell the retreating Boers from their position. I limbered up and advanced as quickly as possible over very rough ground, and advancing well ahead myself to survey the kopje. I found, when I arrived on top, that it was impossible to take wheels over it, so reluctantly had to give it up. Here my officers, men, and mules were almost dead heat and the battle over. Having watered my mules I returned to camp with the remainder of the troops.

At 3 p.m. next day the whole Brigade marched out of Belmont to the railway station, where our guns were entrained. The gun mules were handed over to Col. Hall to save his horses. The guns and ammunition were left entrained under command of Lieut. Dean, with his half-battery and officers to guard them. The remainder of the Naval Brigade marched at the head of the column to the next bivouac. At 10.30 p.m. I received orders from Gen. Methuen that next morning the Naval Brigade would lead the attack on the enemy's position, supported by the Yorkshire Light Infantry, the attacking force being under the command of Brig.-Gen. Money. We paraded at 3 a.m., and, marching at the head of the column, came up to the left of the enemy's position at daylight, the Field Artillery engaging the right and left of the enemy's position and shelling the top of the kopjes. The armoured train with naval guns in rear was steaming up on the left of our advance. I observed one of our guns in action firing at the extreme left of the Boer position, which rested on the railway line. The infantry marching away to the right, I had no further opportunity of observing the action of the guns after that.

The Brigade was deployed into line single rank four paces interval, and advanced on the enemy's position. The disposition of officers was as follows:—Major Plumbe, R.M.L.I., in command of the left, Commander Ethelston, in command of the right, myself in the centre. When in front of the kopje to be attacked the line was wheeled, the right brought up, and the Brigade advanced to the attack immediately. The enemy opened fire on the Brigade at about 600 yards, a very heavy front fire. The Brigade still advanced steadily by rushes, and in a short time a very heavy cross fire was opened from our left flank, but in spite of the murderous fire the behaviour of our officers and men was beyond all praise. They all showed great courage and cool determination. Although losing heavily both in officers and men, I had the satisfaction of seeing, after being wounded and being carried to the rear, our bluejackets and marines in possession of the enemy's position. To give some idea of the heavy fire, several times I saw a man hit three times before he reached the ground, but there was never the slightest hesitation in the advance from beginning to end.

After the death of Commander Ethelston, Lieut. Boyle led his bluejackets into the enemy's position. Capt. Marchant also, after the death of Major Plumbe, led his marines into the enemy's position. When the conduct of all officers is of such a quality it is impossible to single out any particular instance, but I may mention Lieut. Jones, R.M.L.I., who, although wounded in the thigh, did not stop until he led his men into the enemy's position.

I herewith embody two reports: the first from Capt. Marchant, R.M.L.I.; the second from Lieut. Dean of his action on the left of the position, which I did not see, as he was some miles off, but he and his officers and men must have behaved excellently to have done what they did.

R. PROTHERO, Captain and O.C. R.N. Brigade,
Rear-Admiral Sir R. H. Harris, K.C.M.G.,
Commander-in-Chief.

Royal Naval Brigade, in camp at Esland Station,
Nov. 26, 1899.

SIR,—I have the honour to report that the Naval Brigade was in action yesterday morning at the battle of which you have had telegraphic information.

The officers, petty officers, non-commissioned officers, and men behaved with conspicuous gallantry, but I regret to inform you that the losses in killed and wounded were exceptionally heavy for the small number of men forming the Naval Brigade.

I enclose a report from Lieut. F. Dean, who was in command of the guns during the action, as I did not see what the movements of the guns were during that stage of the action.

The remainder of the bluejackets who were not with the guns and all the marines formed part of the firing line, and were under the command of Capt. Prothero. They advanced with other troops, and attacked a very strong position held by the Boers, who were in large force, and had large guns with them. About 400 yards from the foot of an almost inaccessible hill, from which the enemy had to be driven, the line was fired on from two positions, and it was here that so heavy a loss was sustained. I regret to inform you that at this point Commander A. P. Ethelston, Major J. H. Plumbe, R.M.L.I., and Capt. Guy Senior, R.M.A., were killed whilst gallantly leading their men, and Midshipman C. A. E. Huddart was mortally wounded. Capt. Prothero, both before and after he was wounded, behaved with great gallantry and coolness. Lieut. W. T. C. Jones, R.M.L.I., who was wounded in the hip by a bullet which has not yet been extracted, was also wounded at this stage, but undeterred charged to the top of the hill, where his wound was dressed. The conduct of this officer is deserving of the highest praise, and I strongly recommend him to your notice. Midshipman Wardle also showed great gallantry, and remained with Major Plumbe and several dead and wounded men, and attended to them and dressed their wounds under a heavy fire.

Lieut. the Hon. E. S. H. Boyle and Lieut. F. J. Saunders, R.M.L.I., Gunner Lowe, R.N., and Midshipman W. W. Sillem, also charged to the top of the hill, gallantly leading their men all the time under a very heavy fire, and all are deserving of special mention.

At the top of the hill I collected as many men as possible and advanced to the farthest position, driving the enemy before us until the position was finally captured and the Boers in full retreat with their horses and waggons.

Lieut. F. Dean, Lieut. G. W. McO. Campbell, Sub-Lieut. White (who was in charge of the ammunition supply), and Midshipman Armstrong, who were with the guns, behaved with great gallantry in a very exposed position, which was commanded by the enemy's guns, and where they were subjected to a heavy Artillery fire, which proved so accurate as to wound six men of the guns' crews.

Fleet-Surg. James Porter, who was with the firing line, and Surgeon Beadnell with the guns did gallant and most excellent service under trying conditions, under fire nearly the whole time.

It is with deep regret that I have to report the death of Midshipman Huddart, who behaved magnificently, and still advanced after he had been twice wounded until he was finally struck down mortally wounded.

Midshipman Sillem was stunned half-way up the hill and remained unconscious for some time.

Gen. Lord Methuen came specially to see me, and ordered the men to fall in, and complimented them on their behaviour, and expressed his regret at the heavy losses we had sustained in officers and men. After the action was over, being the senior officer present, I collected the men, marched into camp, and took command of the brigade.

A. E. MARCHANT, Captain, R.M.L.I.,
Commanding Royal Naval Brigade.
The Commander-in-Chief, H.M. Ships,
Cape of Good Hope.

Gras Pan, Nov. 26, 1899.

SIR,—In compliance with your orders of this date, I have the honour to submit for the information of the Commander-in-Chief a report of my proceedings with the four naval guns and four half guns' crews under my command yesterday.

Arrived at Gras Pan at 5.45 a.m., and observing the enemy in an apparently strong position, 5,000 yards in advance, I detrained two guns—not having enough men to handle more—and at 5.55 a.m. fired one round to test range. I then waited till the Royal Artillery with six guns took up a position on my right front and opened fire on the enemy. I did the same, and subsequently advanced to ranges of 4,000 and ultimately 2,800 yards, acting from time to time on requests I received from the officer commanding Royal Artillery, who was attacking the same position, viz., two strongly fortified kopjes on either side of the railway with a well protected gun in each.

About 8 a.m. I received verbal orders to retire from my position, as the Royal Artillery were about to move away to the right, and it would then be untenable for my two guns. The Royal Artillery were already moving off when I got the order, and the Boer guns, having got our range accurately, were pouring on us such an effective shrapnel fire that I judged it impossible to carry out the order without either leaving the guns or suffering very heavy losses, both amongst our own men and the company of Royal Engineers who were helping us, if we attempted to retreat with them. I, therefore, continued to fire as briskly as possible at the Boer guns, with such effect that we continuously put them out of action, first one and then the other, for as much as 15 or 20 minutes at a time. Their shells burst with utmost accuracy, and both our guns and ammunition trolleys were splattered all over with shrapnel balls; but, owing to my system of making all hands lie down when we saw their guns flash and remain till the shell burst and the balls flew by, we had only six men wounded when, at 9.30 a.m., the Boers finally ceased firing and abandoned their position.

I beg that you will submit to the Commander-in-Chief that Lieut. Campbell and Mr. Armstrong, midshipman, displayed marked coolness and courage in controlling the fire of their guns and inspiring the men, who all worked splendidly. I would recommend for favourable consideration Petty Officers first class Ashley, H.M.S. Doris, and Fuller, Monarch, who under the trying circumstances laid their guns with the greatest accuracy. I am confident that, had the Boer guns been exposed as ours were, we should have not only silenced but captured them.

On Friday night I found Surgeon Beadnell at Belmont Station; he had been invalided by a medical board that day, and was waiting for the hospital train. Though in bad health he gladly accepted my order to remain with the guns in view of the pending engagement, and on Saturday he rendered invaluable aid to our wounded, working close up to the guns where shrapnel balls were showering every other minute.

F. W. DEAN, Lieutenant, R.N.
Capt. Marchant, R.M.L.I.,
Commanding Naval Brigade.

Monarch at Simon's Bay, Dec. 5, 1899, 569/747.

Forwarded for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, observing that, as expressed in my cable, the conduct of the Naval Brigade at the Graspan action was most gallant and heroic, and I am very proud of the conspicuous gallantry they showed. The wounded men who returned here have continued to exhibit the most excellent courage and fortitude. I deeply lament the sad losses the Service has sustained in the death of Commander Ethelston, Major Plumble, Capt. Senior, and Mr. Huddart, midshipman, and the brave seamen and marines who fell with them. I am glad to say that the wounded officers and men are doing well; most excellent work is being done at the Naval Hospital, the medical officers of which derive great assistance from Mr. Elliott, torpedo gunner, who has the Röntgen apparatus. Capt. Prothero reported to me verbally that Fleet Surg. Porter on the field of Graspan was well up to the front with his bearers and did very fine service for the wounded.

R. H. HARRIS, Rear-Admiral.

Chieveley Camp, Dec. 16, 1899.

SIR,—I beg to report that the whole force under Sir Redvers Buller advanced at 4 a.m. yesterday intending to take the positions of the enemy on the other side of the Tugela. The brigade under my command was disposed as follows:—Two 4 7/16 in. guns and four 12prs., which were on the outpost line in a position 10,000 yards from the main works of the enemy, from which place we had been shelling them on the previous day, advanced to a small rise about 5,000 yards from the entrenched hills across the Tugela. Six 12prs., under Lieut. Ogilvy, with Lieut. James, of Tartar, and Lieut. Deas, of Philomel, were attached to the Field Artillery under Col. Long, and placed under his orders, to work down towards Colenso on the opposite side of the railway, which was on our right. Two 12prs., under Lieut. Burne, held the kopje from which we advanced. For details of what occurred to the six 12prs. under Lieut. Ogilvy, I refer you to his report, enclosed.

My guns, supported by the King's Royal Rifles and Scottish Rifles, came into action about 5.30 a.m., and commenced shelling the enemy's rifle pits and gun positions, but did not draw a single shot. Meantime, the Brigades of Generals Hart and Lyttleton on the left, and those under Generals Hildyard and Barton on the right, with the Cavalry further out, were working round to cross the river above and below Colenso respectively. After we had been shelling for about half-an-hour, and the troops had got within range, the enemy opened a tremendous fire from every imaginable direction from miles of rifle pits along the river and on three ridges behind entrenchments, and kept up a continuous fire from guns planted everywhere right in the middle of a plain and on every ledge and hillock commanding every approach. We kept our guns going on any gun positions that offered and on the trenches, Gen. Buller being with us and directing the fire for an hour or so. I think we silenced a few guns, and am told the lyddite did tremendous execution in the trenches that we could get at. Their heaviest gun, and one that did tremendous damage to our troops in both directions, was placed very cunningly behind the three hills upon which their principal positions were, commanding a broad valley on each side of them, running down towards the river without being visible from our guns. At an early stage Gen. Hart's Brigade, which had suffered tremendously from a front and flank fire, retired, and Col. Lyttleton's brigade were ordered to cover their retreat. The artillery under Col. Long, which had approached to within 500 yards of the trenches before a shot was fired, were raked at that range as they came into action, and, after a short time, were driven from their guns, taking refuge in a "donga." They lost eight guns and most of their officers and many men.

Away on our left the Field Artillery with Hart's Brigade were so roughly handled that they were also driven back, leaving two guns, which were afterwards recovered. Gen. Hildyard's Brigade pushed on doggedly and got into Colenso; and I was ordered to keep up as hot a fire as possible on the rifle pits to enable him to carry out the withdrawal which was subsequently ordered. The withdrawal appeared to be as hot a business as the attack, and took a good long time.

About noon I was ordered to withdraw the two 4-7 in. guns, and, as soon as the retreating brigades were abreast of us—everyone else having gone back—the remainder of the guns were ordered to be withdrawn, and we arrived at the kopje we occupied the day before about 2.30 p.m. The enemy did not devote much attention to us, being, I suppose, too busy with the troops. Only two guns, that I could discover, were firing at us, and none of their shell did us any damage. We silenced both. It was extremely difficult to discover where the guns were fired from. The guns were beautifully concealed, and were mostly firing smokeless powder. We fired at ranges from 3,000 to 11,000 yards. The firing was good, and the lyddite shell burst well. It was blazing hot, and all hands worked well.

E. P. JONES,
Captain Commanding Naval Brigade.
Rear-Admiral Sir Robert H. Harris, K.C.M.G.,
Commander-in-Chief.

Chieveley Camp, Dec. 16, 1899.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit the following account of the part taken by the 12pr. guns forming the battery under my command during the action in front of Colenso. Acting on orders received from Capt. Jones, R.N., I reported myself to Col. Long, C.R.A., who directed me to attach myself to him until the guns had been placed in a suitable position. I therefore directed Lieut. James, of Tartar, to lead the battery behind the Royal Artillery field guns, and told him that we were to form up on the left of the Royal Artillery guns when they came into action. About 6 a.m., the guns being in column of route march with Naval guns in the rear, I was riding in front beside Col. Long, about 450 yards from Colenso Station, when he directed Col. Hunt to bring his guns into action just in front of a deep "donga" running across our front at right angles to the railway. He then told me to come into action on the left, and proceeded to arrange our different zones of fire, while the Royal Artillery guns were getting into position. In front of us was a line of trees up to which our skirmishers had advanced, also a few artillery outposts. Just as I was about to direct my guns where to go, and as the Royal Artillery were unlimbering, the outposts turned sharply and a murderous fire, both rifle and shell, was opened on the guns and ammunition column. I immediately galloped back to my guns and found that the fire had caught them just as the two centre guns were going through a drift across another donga, parallel to the before-mentioned one, but about 400 yds. in the rear. When I arrived I found that all the native drivers with the exception of those for Lieut. James' gun teams had bolted. These guns had just crossed the drift, so I directed him to take up a position on the left and opened fire on Fort Wyllie, from which the majority of the shell fire appeared to come. About this time my horse was shot through the shoulder by a rifle bullet. The two rear guns under Lieut. Deas, of Philomel, not having crossed the drift, I directed him to take ground to the left and open fire also on Fort Wyllie. The two centre guns under Mr. Wright, gunner, of the Terrible, were unfortunately jammed with their ammunition waggons in the drift, the wheels of the waggons being locked and the oxen turned round in their yokes. I managed by the aid of some artillery horses to extricate these guns from the drift and to bring them into action on each side of the drift to the rear of the donga, one of the horses being shot whilst doing this. I could not manage to move the ammunition waggons as the rifle and shell fire was too severe at the time, a 14pr. Maxim Nordenföldt being particularly attentive, and sending three shells into the drift at every discharge. Repeated messages for more men came back from the Royal Artillery batteries, and these were sent to the front by a Royal Artillery sergeant in charge of the ammunition column. After about half-an-hour's firing, as I should judge, the Royal Artillery guns were silenced, nearly all the men being apparently killed or wounded. Soon after this the fire from Fort Wyllie slackened considerably. The Commander-in-Chief now rode up and directed me to move our guns and ammunition as soon as I could. The guns were got away each by a team of Artillery horses, who galloped them up the hill to the rear. The waggons were far more difficult owing to their weight, the large circle they required to turn in, and to the fact that they had to be got out from the drift and turned round by the guns' crews before the horses could be put on. About this time a most brilliant feat was performed by two teams of Artillery, who galloped to the front, against a most murderous fire, limbered up, and rescued two guns; a similar attempt by one other team, at least, resulted in the entire team, as far as I could see, being destroyed. The advance of the Infantry on an open plain, with little or no cover against a most heavy rifle fire from entrenched positions was also a magnificent sight. The conduct of our men without exception was particularly fine, the day being a very hot one and the work hard. The way Nos. 1 and 2 guns' crews of the Terrible got their waggons out of the drift under heavy fire from shell and rifle was quite up to the standard expected of all seamen. I cannot conclude without mentioning the way Lieut. James of the Tartar selected the best suitable position, and opened fire with great effect. Lieut. Deas, of the Philomel, unfortunately had a gun capsized as they were moving off to the left to come into action, but managed to mount it quickly and brought both guns into action. After the first few minutes these two officers took entire charge of their respective guns and brought them safely out of action; Lieut. James coming again into action on the left under the direction of Capt. Jones. Mr. Wright, gunner, worked his guns well, and was of great assistance in withdrawing them. Surg. Macmillan, R.N., Lieut. Palmer, R.A.M.C., were conspicuous in their attendance to the wounded. Our loss was very small, three wounded, one of them very slightly, and I attribute this to (1st) the Fort Wyllie guns and rifle fire being directed principally on the R.A. guns, which were some 300 yards nearer than we were; (2nd) to the enemy directing most of their fire on our ox teams and waggons, they being so much more conspicuous than the guns. Twenty-eight oxen were killed, wounded, or lost.

I might mention that Mr. Boldero and Mr. Hodson, midshipmen, and Mr. Hollins, clerk, were attending on me noting ranges and carrying messages between the guns during the four hours we were working at the drift.

F. C. A. OGILVY,
Lieut. Commanding six 12-pr. guns attached to Second Division.
Captain E. P. Jones, R.N., Commanding
Naval Brigade.

EXTRACT from letter dated Jan. 3, 1900, from the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Cape:—

The report of Capt. Jones on the attack on the enemy's position at Colenso is attached. The officers and men with the guns seem to have behaved with gallantry; I conclude that the General Commander-in-Chief will also refer to their services.

The furlough allowed to soldiers retransferred to the Army Reserve on the demobilisation of the South African Field Force, will be extended to a period of seven days for each complete month of service beyond six months given with the colours since mobilisation.

FIELD GLASSES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

THE UNITED SERVICE GAZETTE, Jan. 27, 1900, says on the Question of Field Glasses:—It is unquestionable that a very large number of the bulky and heavy Field Glasses which have to be generously purchased for our volunteers, and which have to be carried across the shoulders or at the belt, will never see the front at all. If not discarded at Cape Town, very few will get further than the chief depots. It is astonishing how deceptive the weight is. Have the glass weighed before you buy it, and you will often find that one which you would estimate at half a pound weighs 18 to 20 ounces, and the hard leather case 50 per cent. more. Here the Aitchison Patent Pocket Field Glass comes in. It weighs five ounces, and closes to one inch thick, and its power and definition are equal to many glasses four times the size sold at three times the price. It will stand an astonishing amount of rough usage.

THE AITCHISON PATENT POCKET FIELD GLASS weighs five ounces and closes to one inch thick for pocket.

writes:—
NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM.

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

THE COLT AUTOMATIC
AND DUNDONALD GALLOPING
GUN-CARRIAGE.

Colt Automatic Guns, taking the English Service ammunition of 303 calibre, and mounted on DUNDONALD GALLOPING CAR-RIAGES, are now being largely used in South Africa, both by Imperial and Colonial troops.

The Dundonald Carriage carries 2,000 rounds of ammunition, loaded in belts ready for immediate use, and is protected by patent armour plate.
The Carriage can be taken into action by one man and horse, and can be unlim-bered and brought into action within the space of thirty seconds, the Colt Gun being then ready to pour out a stream of bullets at the rate of over 450 rounds per minute, or less if required.

The Dundonald Galloping Ammunition Cart is constructed to carry either 7,000 or 10,500 rounds, loaded in belts and ready for transfer to the Colt Guns at a moment's notice. This also can be galloped into action and unlimbered with the same speed as the Gun Carriage, and therefore forms a most valuable adjunct to the Colt Gun and Dundonald Carriage.

The Dundonald General Service Cart. Specially
adapted for South African Service. The lightest, strongest, most serviceable
Two-wheeled Cart made. Constructed with a Steel Frame and Hide Bottom.
Carries over 1,000 lbs. of Baggage, contains over 100 cubic feet covered space, weighs about 600 lbs.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE state of quietude that had existed for more than a fortnight at Bloemfontein was disturbed on the 29th ult. when an engagement, of which intelligence was received after we went to press last week, took place near Karee Siding, twenty miles to the north beyond the Modder River. The enforced inactivity of the British had encouraged the enemy to assume an aggressive attitude, and to throw forward part of their force to a point fourteen miles south of Brandfort, whence more effective pressure could be exerted against the burghers in the vicinity who had returned to their farms, with a view to compel them to again take up arms. The Boers, 5,000 strong, had established themselves on kopjes lying across the railway, and affording strong positions along a front some three miles in length. A superior force, consisting of General Tucker's (7th) Division, two brigades of mounted infantry, and the 1st and 3rd Cavalry Brigades, with artillery, was sent forward to clear the kopjes, and, if possible, surround and capture the enemy's force. The action took the form of an enveloping movement. The mounted infantry, under Colonel Le Gallais, was directed against the left of the position, General French's cavalry against the right, and the two infantry brigades, under Generals Chermide and Wavell, advanced on the centre. While wide detours were being made by the mounted troops to turn both flanks, the infantry brigades, covered by Kitchener's Horse, made a front attack under cover of the 74th and 62nd Field Batteries. The action commenced with an assault by the 2nd Batn. Norfolk Regiment on the left of the enemy's position, which they seized. The artillery shelled the main body holding a kopje on their right, and prepared the way for a gallant charge by the 1st Batn. East Lancashire Regiment which cleared the position, and forced back the retiring enemy into a converging fire from the guns of General French's and Colonel Le Gallais' out-flanking columns. The Boers, however, effected their retirement in good order, and withdrew their guns with their usual skill. The kopjes that formed the position were very favourable to the defence, being in parts thickly wooded, and covered along their front by rough ground over which the troops, especially the artillery, moved with difficulty. Although no very serious loss was sustained by the enemy in this action, the victory conferred substantial advantages on the British in advancing their front some twenty miles to the north of Bloemfontein, opening the country as far as Brandfort, and covering the repair of the broken railway bridge over the Modder River.

While this action was in progress, the enemy was developing a well-conceived movement farther to the east along the British strategic front, which led to serious and deplorable loss to our arms, recalling the disasters of Stormberg and Colenso. The point whence the chief danger threatened was Ladybrand, where, since Colonel Pilcher's recent daring visit, the Boers were known to be in increasing strength. Ladybrand occupies the extreme right of the line passing from Jacobsdal in the west to the Basuto border in the east, and its occupation in some degree of force as well as that of Thaba N'chu is necessary for the complete security of the British right flank against such operations as those we are about to describe. On Friday, the 30th ult., Lord Roberts was apprised by Colonel Broadwood, who held the post of Thaba N'chu, thirty-eight miles east of Bloemfontein, with a mounted force, that the enemy were approaching in two columns from north and east, and that if hard pressed he would retire to the Waterworks, seventeen miles nearer to Bloemfontein, where there was a British detachment. During the night he accordingly effected his retirement to Sanna's Post, situated near the Waterworks, between the Modder River and the Kloon Spruit. At dawn on Saturday he was shelled by the enemy, and was attacked simultaneously from three sides. Deploying his little force with admirable judgment to oppose the main advance of the enemy, he retired his two batteries with his baggage-train towards Bloemfontein. Two miles from the Waterworks the scouts passed through a drift, presumably crossing the Kloon Spruit, without perceiving that the banks concealed a force of the enemy, who allowed the train and guns to descend into the drift, and then opened upon them a murderous fire at short range. Seven out of twelve guns and the whole of the convoy were captured, and the total loss in the action amounted to 350 casualties, 200 being returned as missing. It would appear from the dispositions of the Boer forces that they not only advanced in force on Thaba N'chu westward from Ladybrand, and southward from the direction of Winburg, but also detached a commando from Brandfort which established itself in an ambush in the Koon Spruit on Colonel Broadwood's direct line of retreat, and within twenty miles of Lord Roberts's headquarters. Serious as the loss proved to be, it might have been considerably greater, but for the timely arrival, on Saturday afternoon, at Sanna's Post while the action was in progress, of General Colville's (9th) Division, after a magnificent march from Bloemfontein, whence it was despatched with the utmost promptitude by Lord Roberts at daylight, followed by General French with two cavalry brigades. The enemy succeeded in destroying the Waterworks at Sanna's Post; but as there is a sufficient supply of drinking water at Bloemfontein from the springs it is hoped that the inconvenience may not prove serious. General Broadwood's command consisted of the Household Cavalry, 10th Hussars, Q and U Batteries Royal Horse Artillery, and Colonel Pilcher's battalion of mounted infantry—in all about 1,400 men, a force that certainly was none too strong to hold the important flanking post of Thaba N'chu, thirty-eight miles from Bloemfontein, with a mobile enemy in considerable strength hovering about the country to both north and east within a two days' march. The enemy's strength was estimated at 7,000 men, with guns. It is a satisfaction to know that, notwithstanding the heavy odds against them, the troops acted with the greatest gallantry, Roberts's Horse and the gunners of Q Battery particularly distinguishing themselves. We had hoped, however, that past experiences in this war had rendered such surprises in carefully selected death-traps well-nigh impossible, by the exercise of a more thorough and intelligent system of scouting than at first obtained. Such details as have been received of the part taken by the Ninth Division and General French's cavalry on arrival on the field show that Colonel Smith-Dorrien's (19th) Brigade at once advanced to engage the enemy, who declined to come to close quarters and retired precipitately, but they are reported to have taken up a strong position in considerable force commanding the Waterworks on the right bank of the Modder River, whence they will doubtless be dislodged later on. Meanwhile the 9th Division and the cavalry returned to Bloemfontein, it being useless to attempt pursuit. There is reason to believe that the mobility of the mounted troops is still impaired through the want of fresh horses, but as there is now a steady flow of remounts to the front, this defect should soon disappear. The present aggressive movements of the Boer commandoes against the British advanced line are consistent with President Kruger's recent boast that he would recapture Bloemfontein, and their plan is in keeping with the usual Boer method of attack by means of enveloping wings making wide detours. Thus, while a force was advanced from Brandfort to menace Lord Roberts's centre, the enemy's left wing swooped down on the exposed right flank of the British at Thaba N'chu, and, preparatory possibly to a similar movement of the enemy's right, a commando is reported to be in position in the west at Paardeberg, near the site of Cronje's discomfiture. At the same time the appearance of laagers in the Barkly West district, as well as in the massing of Boers about Fourteen Streams and along the north bank of the Vaal, are evidence of a desire to push south again in the direction of Kimberley and Jacobsdal, a state of affairs sufficient to account for Lord Methuen's recent and sudden recall to Kimberley from Barkly West. The increased aggressiveness on the part of the enemy, who have become more daring since their success on Saturday, may result in a general action being fought very shortly around Bloemfontein, in which the British commander would, for the first time in the war, have the great advantage conferred by interior lines.

From the rest of the theatre of war there is little to record. Rebellion has disappeared from the north-east of Cape Colony, the scene of General Brabant's recent vigorous operations, and that commander is reported to have occupied Wepener, on the Basuto border, moving from Rouxville, where his 1st Division was on the 30th ult. Had circumstances permitted General Brabant to push on rapidly in the wake of Olivier's retiring commandoes, Ladybrand might now be in Lord Roberts's possession. The general condition of the western districts is fairly satisfactory. With the exception of a gathering of farmers in arms at Upington, the rising in those districts has been suppressed by Lord Kitchener and Colonel Parsons, the former of whom is reported to have returned to Lord Roberts, after leaving a garrison at Prieska. General Clements, whose column came in touch with Bloemfontein on Tuesday, has been moving northwards through the western part of the Orange State, his left feeling out towards Koffy-Fontein on the Jacobsdal road. General Gatacre, based on Springfontein, the junction of the Port Elizabeth and East London lines, both dominates the south of the Orange State and keeps in touch with Bloemfontein, guarding the railway, which is said to be threatened by a commando near Springfontein, where an early action is probable. At Mafeking all was well on the 27th ult. The investment continued, but the Boers had evacuated a portion of their trenches, the pressure on the town was less, and the outlook brighter. The garrison, bold and resourceful as ever, have nevertheless braced themselves up for a further prolonged wait if need be. Colonel Plumer, active still, had invaded the Transvaal to within twelve miles of Zeerust to threaten the communications of the force investing Mafeking, but, finding none of the enemy, had returned.

A rigid silence shrouds the doings of the Natal Army Corps. Sir Redvers Buller is said to be massing troops about his advanced posts at Elands Laagte, and to be obtaining 1,000 water-carriers from India, which may be taken as signs of a probable early advance. Ladysmith has, as a precautionary measure, no doubt, been strengthened by the arrival of six siege howitzers of 6-inch calibre. The acquisition of these powerful pieces before the now historic siege began would have been of untold value. The importance of Sir Redvers Buller's forward position cannot be over-estimated. Geographically it is sixty miles further north than Bloemfontein, and when the general advance recommences this fact cannot but have a disturbing effect on the commandoes operating in the Orange State. A new and interesting feature is developing in the extreme north-east of the great theatre of war. Beira, the natural port of Rhodesia, although belonging to the Portuguese, is about to be utilised again, as it was during the Matabele rebellion of 1896, for the debarkation of men and stores for Rhodesia, under treaty rights existing with the Government of Portugal since 1893. A portion of the Bushmen's Corps is now on its way from Capetown to Beira, and that port will probably be used for disembarking the force destined to operate in Rhodesia under Sir F. Carrington. The use of the port of Beira under this treaty will confer on the British advantages of the first importance, among the earliest of which will probably be found an unexpected means of relieving Mafeking. The distance from Beira to Mafeking, via Salisbury in Rhodesia, is not less than 1,030 miles, but, with the exception of some 270 miles between Salisbury and Bulawayo, the whole is traversed by rail. The general effect of this move on the operations of the war and on the dispositions of the enemy will be watched with the keenest interest.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN ARTILLERY.

THE field guns of most nations at the present time fire projectiles nearly five times as effective in man-killing power as those of the German field artillery in 1870. So said an artillery expert recently.* The splendid services rendered by our field artillery in South Africa and the excellent shooting of our field guns as regards accuracy, have won general admiration, while the close support of our gallant infantry in critical moments by their brave comrades in arms of the artillery, has aroused a sympathy with and enthusiasm for the latter arm, that we may rest assured will never die out. What is then meant by the present outcry against the shortcomings of our artillery? While it is allowed, that the British field gun is excellent of its kind and that there is no doubt of the ability as well as intrepidity of our artillery officers and men, it is said the material is not on a par with those of foreign armies, and that the 15pr. projectile carried by our field batteries cannot compete with the Russian, French, or German field guns, carrying projectiles weighing from 28lbs. to 16½lbs. Of course, it is a question of mobility versus fire effect. Yet it is stated that the weight behind the team of our field gun is greater than that of foreign guns of greater calibre. Again, there is the question of quick-firing field guns.

The French artillery is being rearmed with quick-firing guns, and the Germans have also been given a new gun which is called a quick-firer. The British artillery authorities have been as usual waiting to find out which is the very best of the many systems, and probably also whether our quick-firers cannot be made cheaper at Woolwich, instead of being purchased of Armstrong, Vickers-Maxim, &c. In any case we have hesitated so long that the South African War burst upon us before we were prepared with quick-firing field guns, although our authorities were warned in 1898 by artillery experts that they were as necessary as magazine rifles if our army was to be looked on as able to compete with those of foreign powers. Some prize essays of remarkable ability were contributed to our Royal Artillery Institution journal, showing that our artillery officers were fully alive to the importance of this question. Among the contributors were officers of standing and of recent experience in war.

*See Major May's "Achievements of Field Artillery" and other professional papers.

But all that was done was a sort of makeshift by which, towards the end of last year, our field guns were converted into quickloaders by an arrangement connected with the gun-carriage. This was cleverly designed by Sir George Clarke, and appeared the most economical plan. Whether it would have been true economy to purchase outright from British firms, or, if they could not supply sufficient, from foreign firms, the number of modern quick-firing field gyps required is a question worth going into. Volunteer field artillery, as well as guns of position, are required for the defence of the United Kingdom, and if our field artillery had been re-armed, the existing field artillery guns might have been utilised for the Volunteers. The table below, extracted from German reports in 1898, gives particulars showing some of the chief characteristics of quick-firing field guns at that date, but of course progress has been made since. The Vickers-Maxim, the Swiss gun, and the Swedish guns are omitted from the table. The Creusot quick-firing guns are probably the same as those used by the Boers.

Armstrong (Elswick).—Calibre, 3 ins.; weight of shell, 13 lbs. 11 ozs.; length of gun, 7 ft. 10 ins.; weight of gun, 7 cwt. 4 qrs.; weight of gun limbered up, 36 cwt. 1 qr.; muzzle velocity, 1,970 ft. per sec.; number of rounds in limber, 36; number of bullets in shell, 185; weight of bullets, 7 drs.

The 12c.m. (4.7in.) and 15c.m. (5.9in.) Creusots are field howitzers used as position guns. The 4.7in. field-howitzer is about 5ft. long. It fires a 44lb. shell, and has a muzzle velocity of 1181 f.s. It is, therefore, not a superior gun to the British 5in. field-howitzer, which is an excellent weapon. Its Lyddite 50lb. shells have proved most effective, and it is not understood why, its excellence having been proved in the field at Omdurman, more of these howitzers were not ready, and three brigade divisions sent out with the Army Corps instead of dribbling out single batteries afterwards, as the necessity for them must have been foreseen. Even now there are not sufficient of these, so some Armstrong field-howitzers of 4.7 calibre carrying a shell of 45lb. weight are being ordered. The inconvenience of having different sorts of howitzers and ammunition in Brigade Divisions is evident. Perhaps, however, they are to be used for the siege train. The siege train howitzers are 6in. breech-loaders, eight of these and four 4.7in. quick-firing guns form the siege train at present sent out to South Africa. These howitzers fire a shell weighing 122½lb., and are formidable weapons.

The armament of our coast batteries undoubtedly leaves much to be desired; and if the great public interest which has been shown in this vital question of our armament as regards artillery, as evinced by the many able letters in the Times on the subject, leads to a searching inquiry as to the cause of the insufficiency of our artillery material for the defence of our great Empire, and that inquiry be conducted without prejudice, free from the self-satisfied optimism of officials on the one side, and from the pessimistic opinions of possibly interested manufacturers on the other, and, above all, if prompt action be taken thereon to re-arm our artillery with weapons of the most efficient kind irrespective of cost, so that we may be able to take the field at the shortest notice anywhere for the defence of our wide-spreading responsibilities, the public voice will not have spoken in vain. As far as they go our 15-pr. field-guns are good and shoot straight, and Sir George Clarke's converted carriage is said to have given satisfaction on service so far. The rate of fire obtained has been about six rounds per gun per minute, but the extreme range for shrapnel is 4,000 yards, and with common shell about 5,500 yards. No common shell were taken out by the batteries to South Africa. People have been asking why no guns of position were sent out. Have we any modern guns of position? They are not mentioned among the guns of an army corps, nor are they to be found in the organisation tables of foreign armies. They are used for special purposes of defence. Whether they should be manufactured and used as well as our 5-in. howitzers is a question for artillery experts. Hitherto we have had too many kinds of guns. What is wanted is guns thoroughly up to date and plenty of them.

Army Notes.

The dastardly attempt on the life of the Prince of Wales as his saloon carriage was leaving the railway station at Brussels, on Wednesday, happily failed. But for a merciful Providence the British Empire would have been plunged into the deepest mourning. The Prince, who was on his way to Copenhagen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales, behaved with soldier-like courage and coolness in a trying situation. His Royal Highness is almost as well known on the Continent as he is at home, and wherever he goes his invariable courtesy and unaffected kindness of heart are appreciated and acknowledged. It is a rude shock to find that in the capital of Belgium, of all countries, there could exist even a single Socialist fanatic capable of conceiving so monstrous a project as that to which the most popular Prince in Europe might have fallen a victim. We completely agree with the Brussels newspapers that Sipido is technically mad, in so far as there is not a single honest Belgian who does not repudiate the outrage and deplore that it should have happened on Belgian soil. Fortunately the annals of our Royal Family are comparatively exempt from crimes of this description, though Her Majesty has on more than one occasion been the object of attempts on her life. In each case, however, the perpetrator has been proved to be insane. A remarkable immunity has hitherto attended the Prince of Wales, who has journeyed hither and thither in the United Kingdom and throughout Europe, trusting only to the protection which follows his always genial presence. But the penalty even of popularity has to be paid, and it has been left for this miserable Belgian youth to bring discredit upon a chivalrous nation between whom and ourselves the most friendly relations exist. We can only feel thankful that the Prince has escaped the fate which so recently overtook President Carnot and the Empress of Austria.

We do not think that any Minister who served the Crown since the Stuart days would have ventured to propose the formation of a regiment of Irish Guards. The Queen alone, with the generous confidence of her womanly heart in the loyalty of the race whose gallantry in the field had excited her admiration, could have done that. All the suspicions, traditions, and apprehensions which for two centuries had closed the ranks of the British Army to the Irish soldier unless he could be vouched for as a loyal Protestant, were disposed of in an instant by a royal pen. There were, of course, Irishmen, as there were Irish regiments, in the days of Queen Anne and of the Georges, but they were composed of the carefully selected minority, and "Irish Papists" were most carefully excluded from the household troops. There is yet to be seen in the archives of the Grenadier Guards the stringent, precise orders that no recruits of that description were to be on any account enlisted in the battalion. The late Commander-in-Chief, ready as he was to acknowledge the good quality of these Irish soldiers, was not at all in favour of national regiments, and expressed the opinion that they should always be judiciously blended with Scotchmen, Englishmen, and Welshmen in the companies. Without any desire to justify the policy, it may be admitted that it was not without reason. It was natural that William III.—who would not even trust an English guard, and relied on his Dutchmen as his "Maison du Roi"—should exclude the people who were loyal to King James, and Queen Anne never evinced any feeling for the turbulent race who were almost as devoted to the House of Stuart as the Scottish Clans despite the Act of Union, 1750. The action of the Irish Volunteers, all Protestant as they were, was not at all calculated to inspire English statesmen with enthusiasm, even if they could have raised an Irish regiment at the time, and nothing but the strong martial ardour of a people, described long ago as "bello gaudentes, prælio ridentes," could have broken through the prejudice against race and religion, and enabled them to exhibit on many a battlefield the conspicuous gallantry which their descendants show to-day, and the splendid courage which the Queen has recognised in a manner which will immortalise her name in every Irish home, and act, as we hope and believe, as an irreparable link stronger than any Acts of Parliament between the countries which are under the auspicious reign of Victoria.

It is regrettable that Colonel Broadwood should be held responsible for the disaster at Koven Spruit. That there was blundering somewhere is only too clear, but it is neither just nor creditable to blame the wrong officer, especially one whose career as a cavalry leader is so distinguished. As a matter of fact, Colonel Broadwood appears to have been engaged in a rear-guard action miles distant from the convoy. Hence, whoever is responsible for its loss, he is not the man. From all the published accounts of the disaster it is clear that the old mistake has been repeated, as though we had not suffered sufficiently in prestige and material loss at Nicholson's Nek, Colenso, Stromberg, and Magersfontein. Apparently nothing will teach some of our officers one of the elementary rules of warfare. It was known that the enemy were in force somewhere in the neighbourhood, and that the loyalty of the Free Staters was not above suspicion; yet no precautions were taken to avoid surprise. A valuable convoy was allowed to enter a water-course with as little concern as though it were an English valley. The ground may have been reconnoitred, but one does not get that idea from the various accounts of the disaster, and the mounted infantry may have been ahead of the artillery and transport waggons, but the sudden loss of the battery makes this improbable. It therefore amounts to this, that neither the necessity for effective scouting, nor the use of mounted infantry as feelers, is as thoroughly taken to heart by some of our men as they should be. In spite of all their bitter experience, they despise a mobile enemy in his own country. Lord Rosebery, in an able speech on Tuesday last, pointed out that unless we profit by the lessons taught us by the war, so as to improve the organisation and administration of the Army and the Empire, it would have been in vain. Apparently, the most dearly-bought lesson of all has not been learned by some of our officers on the spot. It is to be hoped that the authorities six thousand miles distant will prove more teachable.

The people who grumble at Lord Roberts's delay at Bloemfontein know nothing of new countries, or indeed of any British colony. Like Canada and Australia, South Africa is a territory of "magnificent distances," or, in plain English, is thinly settled, and only half-reclaimed from the wilderness. When a colonial or an American comes to England, the first thing that strikes him is the excellence of the roads, both in town and country. Even in the oldest British colonies good roads are the exception; in a pastoral country like the Free State they are conspicuous by their absence. In dry weather, travelling over country roads in South Africa is hard on waggons and beast; in wet weather it is next to impossible. With the late rains, which are a feature of the present season, the camps are little better than swamps; what chance then is there for waggon transport? Again, South Africa is an area nearly as large as Europe without Russia, but with a white population no larger than two great manufacturing cities combined. Where, then, are our transport officers to buy mules, horses, and oxen? It has been estimated that not less than 10,000 of these animals have been lost since Lord Roberts sent General French to the relief of Kimberley. Thousands were captured in the Riet, and the rest died of exhaustion in the forced marches which led to the surrender of General Cronje. In densely populated Europe transport animals and horses could be easily replaced; in South Africa it is a slow and difficult business, as most of them have to be conveyed literally from the four corners of the earth. When the bad roads, the long distances, the nature of the country, and the growing scarcity of oxen and remounts are taken into consideration, one must wonder, not that our men have done so little, but that they have done so much. Unfortunately the disaster at Koven Spruit is likely to have the same ill effects on Lord Roberts's advance as the loss of the convoy on the Riet.

The agreement which Her Majesty's Government has just concluded with Portugal is finding little favour on the Continent. It defies International Law, shrieks our rivals, but seeing the use they have made of Delagoa Bay since the outbreak of war, one sadly fears that they are animated more by hatred of this country than by respect for the obligations of neutrality. For twenty years that foreign port has been used as the back door of an inland State with the avowed purpose of destroying British interests. It has certainly been the chief means of prolonging hostilities in the present war. Would any other of the Great Powers but ourselves have quietly submitted to such a thing for a month? We have borne it for six, and only now take advantage of our position to make a counter-stroke. Ultimate destination being a vague term, it is difficult to understand why we have not been able to use the Beira-Umtali Railway under previous agreements with Portugal, unless indeed the Transvaal is able to exert pressure at Lisbon greater than our own. From the evidence before the Berne arbitrators in connection with the Delagoa Bay Railway this is only too likely. With the success of Lord Roberts's march to Bloemfontein the attitude of Portugal has changed. She now shows an inclination to range herself on the winning side. Up to the present loyal Rhodesia has been isolated, and our Generals forced to attack the Republics on the east, west, and south, where the nature of the country and the presence of rebel Dutch render the task one of great difficulty. On the north the frontier of the Transvaal is open, and with such a force as General Carrington has at his command, excellent work should be done to facilitate the advance of Lord Roberts, Sir Redvers Buller, and Lord Methuen. It should even be possible to prevent the burghers establishing themselves in the Zoutpansberg as guerilla fighters. If only we had been able to use the Beira-Umtali Railway for the transport of men and supplies a few months earlier, Mafeking would now be relieved and the tension in Natal and on the western border relaxed long ago. Even as it is, much may be expected from a South African General with the record of Sir Frederick Carrington.

The accounts of the relief of Ladysmith which have appeared in the Times and Standard are painful reading. Despair was doing its worst on February 26, the beleaguered garrison having almost lost hope. The 27th came, and still there was no sign of the advancing force. The strain had become almost unbearable, but comfort soon came, for the enemy later was found to be in retreat, a retreat which might have been taken full advantage of if General Brocklehurst had been able to command the service of his cavalry.

The garrison was therefore rendered powerless. It may well be imagined what the feelings of officers and men were. Their disappointment was not to be borne for long, as a little later on "a few khaki-clad horsemen appeared over the bluff across the valley," the fan of an advancing guard spread out, and with "a giant cheer"—we quote from the admirable letter of the Times correspondent—the whole of Ladysmith "surged down to the drift upon the river" to welcome Lord Dundonald and his gallant force, which had been quietly operating for weeks in order to accomplish a feat of arms which will live in the annals of British cavalry. We had hoped that long ere this Lord Dundonald would have received the recognition which is due to him for his splendid achievement. But red tape has asserted itself once more, and the honours are to be deferred until such time as officialdom can bring itself to see what great injustice has been done. The public will scarcely be able to realise the fact, but it is a fact nevertheless, that Lord Dundonald, the man who relieved Ladysmith, is still only a Colonel, whereas all the other cavalry officers who command brigades in South Africa—all his juniors—hold the rank of Major-General, one of them, the very man in Cavalry command with Sir Redvers Buller, being ten years his junior. Sir George White is now on his way home. Directly he arrives we trust that our good Commander-in-Chief, who is as sensible as any man living of the services which have been rendered by our troops, will take steps to hasten the issue of a Ladysmith Gazette. The defence and relief of Ladysmith mark a distinct epoch in the history of the war in South Africa, and they ought to be treated accordingly. We have the procedure of the Crimean War to support our contention. Those who did their duty so heroically under Sir George White, and those, too, who have shed their blood so willingly under Sir Redvers Buller, deserve every consideration. It ought not to be possible for red tape to obtain such an ascendancy in these days as to deny the justice which was freely extended to their fathers and grandfathers who fought their country's battles in 1854-55. Red tape raised no absurd objections then; if it did they were not listened to. Why should it do so now? But from statements made by Mr. Wyndham in the House of Commons it would seem that the demon is determined to hold sway and prevent any distribution of honours until the war is at an end. Such a course is to be deprecated. On every ground it is desirable that the rewards should be distributed promptly.

Mr. Wyndham has announced the steps which it is intended to take to fill the commissioned ranks of the Army. In all 1,211 appointments are to be made, and they are to be distributed thus by direct appointment:—From the Militia, 312; the Volunteers, 172; the Malta Artillery, 2; the Malta Regiment, 4; the Yeomanry, 20; the Colonies, 276; the Universities, 345; the public schools, 30; and on the recommendation of Lord Roberts, 50; these numbers being, of course, subject to minor variations. It is evident that for some time to come the way will be made easy for young men both at home and in the Colonies who desire to adopt arms as a profession. There ought to be no lack of candidates, but some points naturally suggest themselves. If young men are to be taken under such a general scheme, what are the intentions of the War Office with regard to their instruction once they are gazetted? for presumably there will be no relaxation of qualifying tests so far as examinations for promotion are concerned. The casualties of the war, the augmentation of our forces, and the increase of the Indian Staff Corps have combined to create a considerable demand for officers. The Empire will prove itself equal to that demand. Of that we are convinced, but the fact that such a large influx of new blood is necessary will throw a great amount of extra work on the department of military education, and it is as well that we should be prepared for present and future contingencies. It is not to be supposed that all the aspirants to commissions will be able to guarantee that they can supplement their pay by liberal allowances. What is to be their pay by liberal allowances? Three done to help them to bear the burden? Three things seem to be urgently required, the partial "equipment" of regimental messes, the furnishing of officers' quarters, and an annual Government grant for messes and bands. These concessions would tend greatly to relieve the expenses of regimental officers, and the time is now fast approaching when something will be required to be done in these directions to render the Service possible for poor men.

When Field-Marshal Lord Wolseley, the Commander-in-Chief, and Sir Evelyn Wood, the Adjutant-General, of the Army, crown the tomb of a civilian writer for the Press with epistolary laurels, it may be taken as an extraordinary tribute to the personal qualities of the man—as well as a unique testimony to the correspondent of a newspaper. To the Daily News itself Archibald Forbes's services were priceless. The editor with good reason wrote to Lord Wolseley, who hastened to express the high opinion he had of them—testimony all the more valuable to the individual, as Lord Wolseley had not hesitated to pass judgment upon correspondents en bloc in his excellent "Pocket Book" as the curse of modern armies; a judgment toned down, and, indeed, reversed, we may say, on many occasions. "Cool under fire," "of great physical endurance," and of true military instinct, a friend of soldiers, "one of the very best correspondents who ever accompanied an army in the field." It was, in some measure, a misfortune for Forbes that he was too young when he began "to bump a trooper's saddle" to see any part of the great war with Russia in 1854-55-56, and his experience of campaigning and of battlefields, large as it was and varied in its nature, was chiefly acquired in accompanying Russian, German, or other foreign armies in the field, in which, although he was well read and solidly educated as an English litterateur, the difficulties of his calling were increased by his want of knowledge of French or German. When Lord Wolseley was halting on the Tugela, in his attempt to reach Crealock's camp at Fort Durnford, Forbes, riding from the battlefield of Ulandi, managed to send from a cross station the news that Cetewayo was defeated, and the Zulu power destroyed for ever. Sir Evelyn Wood, the Adjutant-General, also wrote to the Daily News, begging the editor "to allow him to record his impression on his late friend, Archibald Forbes, gathered from personal knowledge of over twenty years." He was, says Sir Evelyn, keen-sighted, sagacious, and discreet. A good comrade, a brave man, he was a master of the art of "describing war in pure English." Such testimonials would have served a soldier better, perhaps, than laudatory mention in despatches and the highest recommendations from victorious commanders. To a civilian journalist they brought no rank, emolument, or honour. Forbes' breast was bright and glistening with stars, crosses, medals, and brilliant ribbons; but they were Russian, Prussian, Servian, French, &c., and we do not think he ever received a British decoration. His services were rendered to his paper, and through it to the world at large. People did not care to think of the labour with which Forbes dug his facts out with the point of his steel pen, at the expense of his iron constitution compelling nature to obey his will and to overcome hunger and cold, heat and fatigue, bodily ailments, official opposition, and caste dislike in the discharge of his duty to his employers. He was a soldier journalist, "tam marti quam mercurio."

The proposals of the Government in regard to the increase of the Army find many critics in the magazines, and the April number of the Nineteenth Century has quite a number of articles devoted to considerations arising out of the war. Sir George Clarke, with his customary lucidity, set forth a suggestion in regard to the proper precautions for Imperial safety. After making it plain that the Naval question lies at the very root of national defence, he touches upon the effect of Lord Roberts's strategy, comparing it in its influence with examples of Naval strategy which he cites. The real purpose of his article is to enforce the value of the Militia. Our military organisation, as it existed when the campaign in South Africa began, was not based, he says, upon any great principles, nor in accordance with any broad view of the demands of war. He points out that the governing condition, that our foreign garrisons must be composed of men voluntarily recruited, is special to us only in the sense that the proportion of our troops serving abroad is immensely greater than in the case of any other army. Like Mr. Arnold-Forster, who follows him in the review, he has little appreciation of the linked battalion system, if its essential feature is the maintenance of an equal number of battalions at home and abroad. Sir George Clarke's idea is that we should have regular forces for the garrisons in India, Egypt, and certain foreign stations, and 40,000 men at home for any emergency. We must then, he argues, constitute a real second line or Landwehr, and in the Militia, with its ancient constitution and great traditions, we have the means ready to our hands. The Militia alone of our auxiliary forces has been able to send out organised battalions in the emergency, while the Volunteer system can never provide the organised field troops which a great Army demands. Sir George Clarke refers to the Swiss Militia as a type, and advocates the doubling in strength of our own force. The Militia, as we all know, serves as a regular feeder for the Army, but it is not so well understood that the strength of the old constitutional force is in direct counter-proportion to the vigour of the Volunteer movement in certain localities. Thus, in Ireland, where there is no competition with Volunteers, the proportion of Militiamen is very great; while in Scotland, where the competition is generally less, it is still much higher than in England and Wales. The contention is that the Volunteers deplete the Militia without giving adequate compensation. Sir George Clarke believes that it would be sound policy to cut down the strength of the Volunteers to 100,000 and to transfer the balance to the Militia. He suggests an organisation for this force in eighteen divisions available for any service, and capable of being mobilised in a fortnight, while the Yeomanry and Volunteers would be relegated purely to home defence work.

Mr. H. O. Arnold-Forster holds a different view, though he is equally displeased with the proposals of the War Office. As to the temporary provisions he thinks it disheartening that they should be necessary at all, and he does not see anything very glorious in our having raised 90,000 effective troops with an annual expenditure of £20,000,000. He is pleased with the proposed additions to the artillery, but gravely doubts whether the men can be obtained, and he thinks the demands made upon the Volunteers are excessive and imply too great a sacrifice to be capable of fulfilment. In regard to those parts of the War Office programme which are intended to make a permanent addition to the numbers and efficiency of our land forces, Mr. Arnold-Forster strongly holds that the Government is deliberately committed by its scheme to the perpetuation of practices which have been mischievous in the past and are self-condemned. It is idle, he says, to expect the recruits to come forward in the numbers expected by Mr. Wyndham. Instead of seeking to gather an excessive number he argues that it would be better to take step by step those men, or the majority of them, in ranks to the proportion of about 48 per cent disappear entirely, and through one or another are lost to the nation, and none of ever go into the reserve though all have paid for. Again, the critic is not satisfied with a system that leaves the Army unprepared for war, and which has a reserve which he deems as not really a reserve at all, but as part of a fighting line. He ridicules the system of linked battalions, and thinks that one day the author will recognise that a general service army for the defence of the Empire at home and abroad is necessary, with another short service army for the defence of these islands.

The military contributor of Blackwood continues his trenchant criticisms, though he reviews events in the Orange State far more placidly than he contemplated the happenings in Natal. "With the appearance of a field army, which the organising talents of Lord Kitchener had created, 'kopje tactics' disappeared, and Lord Roberts was able to select his point of attack. The mobility of our column was equal to that of the Boers, and railways were relegated to their proper place in the rear." After picturesquely discoursing upon South African drifts, the critic follows Lord Roberts in his march to Bloemfontein. The cavalry horses were tired at Poplar Grove, but he thinks, if the cavalry had made a slightly more extended circle, they would have cut off the fugitives, and that the plaof the General would have been more completely successful. The writer believes that, with the oncoming of winter, the Boer, possessing no stock of forage, will be unable to fight, unless he fights on foot, and that the time, though it will hrow a great strain upon our transport, will lace strategy and tactics upon our side. He axes sarcastic at "the military jargon" known as "preparation by fire," and has a well deserved tribute for the splendid operations of the Army Service Corps. "Whatever faults have been found, none have been heard about the Army Service Corps. To feed an army of perhaps 40,000 men and 5,000 horses, and to carry the belongings of these combatants along 500 miles of a single line of rails with 100 more to follow across an almost trackless desert, is what Lord Roberts asked of the Army Service Corps; and he was not disappointed. Nor were the men disappointed; it is the soldiers who know all about these quiet business-like men who carry them and their baggage, who feed them with such regularity that of the 200,000 men in Africa how few have gone without their breakfast! Whatever faults exists in our Army organisation, the Army Service Corps stands out a marvel of hard work."

Major-General Turner having now taken up his duties as Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, it is earnestly to be hoped that the officers elected to assist him may be chosen one each from the Militia, the Yeomanry, and the Volunteers. The present is a fitting opportunity for the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-Generals for these forces on the headquarters staff of the Army. We cannot but think that it will be the lot of the Auxiliary Forces themselves if long-standing grievance be not now redressed, for surely it is a gross anomaly, some half-million of men are now, have hitherto been, wholly unrepresented on the administrative staff in Pall Mall any officer of their own services. This at once offers an explanation of the whole supercession of Militia officers by officers of Volunteers and Imperial Yeomanry now in the field in South Africa, and to which "gross injury," Lord Raglan called attention in the House of Lords last week. We would here state that the noble lord failed apparently to state the full extent of the grievance, as the full, under certain conditions, of honorary rank on field officers and of Militia, places them at a very serious disadvantage.

Government proposals for the improvement of the Militia, &c., by no means exhaust the measures that will have to be adopted ere long. We will here mention another that is embraced within this category—viz., that far more care will have to be exercised in the selection of officers of the Regular Forces, for appointment to adjutancies and this observation will apply in like manner to the selection of sergeants for duty with the permanent staff of Militia units. A propos of this, will be remembered that a distinguished Colonel of Militia, now deceased, in a lecture delivered by him some few years ago at the Royal United Service Institution, declared that the authorities to all intents and purposes posted up the barrack gates of Militia regiments this notice: "Rubbish may be shot here." We imagine that to-day many commanding officers would a tale unfold in corroboration of this.

The ignorance of the public regarding the Militia and its signal services rendered to the State may be condoned, but what is to be thought of the Commander-in-Chief who, when presiding a few days ago at the annual meeting of the Militia Rifle Association, so far forgot his duty as to make the amazing pronouncement that the present is "the first time in history that Militia battalions had ever been sent to the seat of war." Lord Wolseley, however, was immediately restored to orthodoxy on the subject by the Colonels of Militia present at the meeting, who showed that the exact reverse was the case, he at once apologised for his lapse of memory. The bare facts are that since the close of the last century, and up to to-day, no Militia Army, when engaged in the more important operations of the period could have kept the field against the enemy but for the Militiamen sent in their tens of thousands to support the regular troops, and who—the Militiamen, clothed and equipped and armed as such—fought and died on many a field, notably at Talavera, in upholding the honour of the realm side by side with their brethren of the Regulars. We would suggest that the committee of Service members in the House of Commons should strike the iron while it is hot, and urge upon the Secretary of State for War the adoption of measures for the improvement of the Militia which it is now recognised must be made more of a military reality than hitherto it has been allowed to be under the very short-sighted policy which has prevailed at the War Office. When a Commander-in-Chief displays such complete ignorance as to the past history of the force that Lord Wolseley did last week, it is not to be wondered at perhaps that the force has been allowed to drift into the condition that it is.

The foreign military opinions upon the war do not seem to us at the present time particularly interesting. They mostly consist of a narrative of events with a very grudging admission of our success. Thus the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung remarks of the victory of Poplar Grove that it was a tactical failure, and it has some remarks which seem in bad taste concerning the British "jingo organs," which rejoiced in the battle on the Kaalspruit as a "victory." It is amusing to see how niggardly is the Berlin paper in its admission of our success. There was no victory; it was merely an expression of superior strength. Even if the Boers cannot hope for final success, this paper trusts and believes that they will be able to carry on their defence for some months longer, by which time we may hope that the Germans will have learnt something concerning the art of war in modern conditions. As to the French papers, strangely enough, when they are contrasting us with the Boers, they find in our Army neither homogeneity nor cohesion, and one of them—the Echo de l'Armée—is persuaded that Lord Roberts enjoys his sojourn at Bloemfontein too much to wish to get further forward. It is unnecessary to cite more of this kind of stuff.

We are glad to learn that the sick and wounded officers' fund, under the able Presidentship of the Duke of Abercorn, is now in full working order. The object of the fund is to afford medical and surgical aid to all officers returning from South Africa whose means are not sufficient to provide them with the best medical attendance and nursing. Our readers are no doubt aware that the State practically takes no interest in the sick officer, and from the day he lands in England, invalided from the seat of war, or indeed from India, or any of our colonies, he is thrown on his own resources, and till he reports himself twenty-one days before the expiration of his leave a grateful country knows nothing, and apparently cares less, regarding his progress towards health. It is true that the War Office "saves its face" by having a few beds for sick officers at Netley, but the arrangements there are not very acceptable, as is proved by the fact that so few take advantage of them. Shortly after the war broke out, the Duke of Abercorn started the fund in question, and the arrangements connected with it are now complete, and the scheme is a going concern. An immense number of the leading consulting surgeons and physicians of London and the provinces joined the general committee, and have most generously given their valuable services gratis. This committee meets periodically at Hampden House to have laid before it the details of the working of the Executive Committee, consisting of the Duke of Abercorn as chairman, Mr. Lyttelton Sell, Dr. Hood, Mr. J. L. Morgan, Mr. Alexander Johnston, and Surgeon-General Hamilton, with the Hon. Arthur Broderick as honorary secretary. Briefly, the system of working is as follows:—Circulars have been sent out to General Officer Commanding, Capetown, for distribution to sick and wounded officers on board the returning transports and hospital ships, and officers wishing to avail themselves of the benefits of the fund can send telegrams free from St. Vincent or Madeira. On arrival at Southampton or London these officers can at once proceed to selected surgical or medical Homes, where they are taken charge of and attended by one of the consultants of the general committee, all charges for chloroformists, masseurs, nursing, board, &c., being borne by the fund; or else they can (and many naturally prefer this arrangement) proceed home first to visit their friends and subsequently take advantage of the committee's arrangements. Besides this, numerous ladies and gentlemen, both at home and abroad, have most generously placed accommodation at the disposal of the committee where convalescent officers can be sent on the termination of their medical or surgical treatment. Up to the present a considerable number of invalided officers have taken advantage of these arrangements, and it is expected that later on, when the stream of sick and wounded increases—which it is certain to do—that the committee's resources will have much work and expense thrown on them. The public have so far been very generous with subscriptions and assistance, and no doubt many military and naval officers (for the benefits of the fund are open to both services) will desire to assist the good work now being carried on. Subscriptions can be forwarded to the hon. secretary of the fund, Hampden House, Green Street, by whom they will be duly acknowledged.

After lengthy consideration the Law Officers of the Crown have come to the conclusion that there is not sufficient ground for a criminal prosecution of the Army contractors against whom allegations of fraud are made in connection with the supply of stores for the troops in South Africa. The announcement of the decision arrived at, which was made by Mr. Balfour in reply to a question put to him on the subject by Major Rasch on Thursday, has been received with universal regret. The matter, however, is not to be allowed to rest here. Major Rasch and other public-spirited men who have taken this matter up in Parliament have suggested the advisability of appointing a Committee to examine and report on the frauds alleged to have been committed, and to this proposal the Government have agreed. It will not, of course, be possible for the Committee to get to work before Easter, but when it does enter upon the task we hope that its inquiry will be thorough. The public generally, and those interested in military matters in particular, are anxious to get to the bottom of all the insinuations and innuendoes that have been thrown out in various quarters. There is an ugly suspicion, which we hope and believe will be proved to be unfounded, that some of the officials at the War Office are not altogether blameless for some of the abuses that have come to light. No one has any doubt as to the integrity of the gentlemen at the head of the civil and political departments of our military administration; but it would be useless to assert that the same complete confidence prevails in respect to their subordinates. We do not ourselves give any credence to the idea that seems to prevail in some circles that there are men at the War Office who are anxious to avoid inquiry into this unfortunate business; nor shall we give any credence to it until some proof is forthcoming. But we welcome the prospect of a Parliamentary inquiry and the promise that inquiry holds out of the whole matter being probed to the bottom. Whether there is any object in the Committee having its inquiry with a view to issuing an early report is, however, an open question. There is much to be said in favour of settling the question at once; but on the other hand it may be pointed out that much salient evidence would have to be omitted if the Committee closed its inquiry and presented its report before the war is over. A good many defects in the stores intended for South Africa were detected before they were sent out of England, but we venture to think that the men at the Cape who were charged with receiving and distributing them will be able to speak with stronger force than anyone on this side of the waters.

Messrs. Thomas Bland and Sons, the well-known gun and rifle makers, contractors to H.M. War and India Offices, have, in consequence of the expiration of their lease of No. 430, West Strand, removed from that address to the adjoining premises, No. 2, King William Street.

The Royal Eastern Reserve Regiment has taken up garrison duty at Warley Barracks. There are in all six officers and 850 rank and file, under the command of Major Hennell. About 100 of the men at one time belonged to the Essex Regiment, and others have been in either the Norfolk, Lincolnshire, Suffolk, Bedfordshire, or Northamptonshire Regiments.

A memorial service for the late Major-General Sir Edward Woodgate was held on Thursday in the parish church, Grateley, Hants, and was largely attended.

Major-General E. S. Brook has been appointed to the command of a Brigade at Aldershot.

Profound regret was caused at Bloemfontein when the news arrived of the death of Colonel the Hon. G. H. Gough, C.B., at Norvals Point on the 29th ult., for the gallant officer was well known, he having been so long associated with Lord Wolseley at headquarters in the capacity of private secretary. To say that he was respected would be inadequately to express the feelings entertained for him. By order of Lord Roberts the remains were conveyed to Bloemfontein for burial in the cemetery there. The funeral took place on the 30th ult., with full military honours. Among those who followed the gun-carriage, upon which the coffin was carried to the grave, were Lord Roberts and the whole of his staff. A former colleague writes to us:—"I cannot tell you how shocked we all are to hear the news of Colonel Gough's death. A truer-hearted and more upright and honourable gentleman, a better soldier and more courteous and industrious official, never served on the Staff at headquarters. To know him was to feel affection for him, to be associated with him in office was to admire the abilities which were hidden under that quiet yet manly exterior. He was an officer who was capable of anything, for like most quiet men he was blessed with wonderful powers of judgment, whilst his knowledge of the duties and requirements of his own arm of the Service was exceptional. In his death the Army has indeed sustained a great loss, and throughout the War Office he will be sincerely mourned."

Colonel W. Wood, having served in what is now the Essex Regiment from March 31, 1863, to September 10, 1895, was naturally anxious to become associated once more with his old corps. The expiration of the term of command of Colonel Ravenhill at Warley gave him this opportunity, so he has readily accepted transfer from the command of the 87th Regimental District at Armagh, to which he was appointed a year ago, to that of the 44th Regimental District at Warley with effect from the 16th inst.

A correspondent, writing from Ladysmith, states that General Warren, addressing the troops recently, paid a high tribute to the conduct of the following officers and men:—

"Lieut.-Colonel Hill, 2nd Batn. Middlesex Regiment, went and under a heavy fire brought in a wounded man of the Scottish Rifles who had fallen exhausted; Trooper J. Gillmore formed men into a section, personally taking command and supervising that section for two hours; Private G. Richardson picked up a live shell and threw it over the rocks before it burst; Colonel Nash, of the Imperial Light Infantry, reports that Corporal Weldon refused to surrender, and was killed outside the trenches; Private B. Jones was five times wounded, yet was returning to the firing line, but was prevented by those dressing his wounds. With regard to the 2nd Batn. Dorsetshire Regiment (said Sir Charles Warren), "I have mentioned the great service that was rendered in carrying down large quantities of ammunition in the dark, which would otherwise have fallen into the enemy's hands. I also wish to particularly mention the conduct of the Dorset Regiment during the burial of the dead. I have heard their conduct spoken of by several different persons, and all in the most favourable light. I shall not fail to bring their gallantry and devotion to duty, reflecting as it does the greatest credit on all ranks."

Dr. Randall, headmaster of Charterhouse, speaking at the school sports distribution on Saturday, referred to Colonel Baden-Powell's association with the school, pointing out that there were 220 Old Carthusians at the front. He was delighted, he said, to think that one of such indomitable resource and gallantry, who had become the veritable darling of the nation, should have received his early training at Charterhouse, where his name would ever be honoured, and serve as an incentive to rising generations to do their duty.

Colonel T. A. St. Quintin, lately Assistant Inspector of Remounts in Ireland, has left England for South Africa to join the staff of the Imperial Yeomanry as Remount Officer at the base.

Colonel C. H. Scott, R.A., has arrived home from India to take up his duties as member of the Ordnance Committee.

Colonel H. Cantley, retired list, R.E., has been appointed Commanding Royal Engineer Perth Sub-District, with effect from March 9, vice Colonel F. Gosset, who has completed his five years in the rank as Lieut.-Colonel.

Colonel J. C. R. Glasgow, late Suffolk Regiment, has vacated his appointment as A.A.G., headquarters Bengal, and returns to England, being succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel R. M. Greenfield, late Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, A.A.G., Burma District.

Colonel R. G. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, has so far recovered from the strain of the Kimberley defence as to have joined the Mafeking relief force at Fourteen Streams. Colonel Kekewich telegraphed last week that he was well and fit.

Colonel C. J. B. Stewart, Retired List, late 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders, has been appointed to the command of the Royal Scottish Reserve Battalion at Fort George.

Colonel Stacpole, on his recent promotion to a Brevet-Colonelcy, received a telegram from H.R.H. the Duke of York, dated Sandringham, March 30:—"My best congratulations on your promotion after five months' valuable service at Southampton."

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent has returned to England full of his experiences in South Africa. He was met on his arrival in London by Lord Wolseley, and he has since had several interviews with the Marquis of Lansdowne and other chiefs of the War Office. Sir Howard looks all the better for his trip to the Cape, but he now admits the justice of the medical verdict which deprived him of his command in the C.I.V. The gallant Colonel during his stay in South Africa visited all our armies, camps, and military establishments. He was with his old regiment, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers through three days' fighting before the relief of Ladysmith. He was also present at the surrender of General Cronje, and saw a good deal of Lord Methuen in the field. He has, in fact, come back full of interesting information on matters military. Some of his experiences he related at a private meeting of the Service members at the House of Commons on Monday. He stated that the sick and wounded were well looked after, and the British troops generally well fed. Of the transport arrangements and of the work of the Army Service Corps he spoke highly. The organisation at the base of operations likewise came in for his commendation. The Boer habit of taking cover and the facility with which they moved their big guns excited admiration. Sir Howard, like others who have watched the operations in South Africa, thinks the British officers are too prone to expose themselves in action. This is an error on the right side; but there is no doubt that it explains the heavy casualties amongst officers in the War. The Slade-Wallace equipment he regards as very unsatisfactory. He vividly illustrated the general difficulty of the campaign by saying it was like transporting 200,000 men from Calcutta to Marseilles, and then sending them to fight at Hanover. There was undoubtedly too little cavalry sent out in the first instance, but the War Office, he said, had now mounted 40,000 men.

There are so many brands of Scotch whisky before the public that the public sometimes has difficulty in selecting the good brands out of the many. There is, however, one brand that can safely be recommended. Messrs. James Martin and Co., of Leith, supply a special Scotch whisky which is a blend of some of the oldest and finest Highland whiskies now distilled. Messrs. Martin, who supply the Royal Navy, guarantee their special Scotch whisky to be absolutely pure, of great age, and thoroughly matured; and certainly their guarantee is well justified.

Army Foreign.

In the French Chamber, on Monday, General de Galliffet, speaking on the Colonial Army Bill, remarked that on account of diplomatic incidents writers had raised a cry of alarm, substituting the peril on the west for the peril on the east. The country might thus have believed that the arsenals and trading posts were liable to seizure by surprise. The gunners of the 350 coast batteries, manœuvring on stationary platforms, were said to be incapable of firing on ships in motion. It was time to dispel these misgivings, which should not exist in a great country anxious for peace but resolved and able to defend itself. On taking office nine months ago he had been five years away from all sources of military information, and, in spite of his scepticism respecting military writers, he was not without uneasiness. But examination of the measures taken and conferences with the head of the General Staff enabled him to render homage to the sagacious patriotism of his two predecessors and restored his confidence. He could honestly declare that the arsenals and ports were free from all danger, the garrisons sufficient, and the gunners well trained. All the coast, both of France and Algeria and Tunis, had nothing to dread, though he did not say that no improvement was needed.

"There is no doubt, for instance," said the General, "that new batteries will be required with perfected guns of a surprising rapidity and precision. Still more will be necessary, for we must, as far as possible, protect human life. The General Staff has to study everything, the probable as well as the improbable, and we can study, therefore, the question of invasion. It is an excellent exercise for our officers, but I persist in affirming that the invasion of a country by the coasts would become dangerous only if the country were also invaded from another side. It is said also that steam navigation facilitates a landing, but railways have come to render an operation of this sort almost impossible if not ridiculous."

The Minister of War went on to demonstrate that the country with the strongest fleet can without the intervention of the land army defend its coasts, and that the country with the weakest fleet can count only on its troops to defend its soil. General de Galliffet suggested that a country attacked in these conditions will, of course, organise its defence as far as the troops were concerned. It was absolutely necessary, however, that all such troops should be under one command, and not dependent on two Ministries. "I cannot say," said he, "whether you will find in this country a Minister of Marine ready to fight with one foot on land and another in the water. But it will be difficult, I think, for you to find a Minister of War resolved on defending a house the doors of which have not been entrusted to him." This, said General de Galliffet, was also General Saussier's opinion.

The Austrian Army manœuvres will take place this year in the neighbourhood of Jaslo-Krasno, not far from the Russian frontier in Galicia. They will be held on a scale hitherto unprecedented in Austria-Hungary. There will be no less than 130,000 Infantry in the field, besides 150 squadrons of Cavalry, and 72 batteries of Artillery with 300 guns. These figures are exclusive of supplementary troops, ambulance, Army service, and so forth. Two Armies will be formed, as usual, which will carry on a regular campaign against one another. It is believed that the Heir-Presumptive, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, will be in command of one of the Armies. The Emperor Francis Joseph will attend the manœuvres.

General Otis has telegraphed from the Philippines to Washington that a number of important insurgent officers are surrendering, and that the situation is gradually becoming more pacific.

The Barracks on Salisbury Plain are to be built on similar lines to those at Aldershot, and the special feature of the scheme will be the accommodation for Artillery. The construction of the barracks is to be supervised from Aldershot, and the work will probably be taken in hand towards the end of the present year.

FORTHCOMING MILITARY MEETINGS.—Royal Military Tournament, London, May 17 to 31; Aldershot Rifle Meeting, July 2 to 5; Army Sixty Meeting, July 6 to 7; Bisley Meeting, July 9 to 21. The Bronze Medal Tournament will be held at Aldershot at her late in April or early in May. Militia are, for the purposes of competition, classed as Regulars in all these meetings.

WAR SUMMARY.

Saturday, March 31.

Telegram from Lord Roberts issued from the War Office late last night:—

"Bloemfontein, March 30.

"Owing to activity of enemy in our immediate front and their hostile action towards burghers who had surrendered under terms of my proclamation, I found it necessary to drive them from some kopjes they occupied near the Karee Siding Station, few miles south of Brandfort. Operation was successfully carried out by 7th (Tucker's) Division, assisted by 1st and 3rd Cavalry Brigades under French, and Le Gallais's Regiment Mounted Infantry. Enemy retreated to Brandfort, and our troops now hold kopjes. Our casualties were:—Scottish Borderers—Killed: Capt. Going. Wounded: Capt. Sellar and Lieuts. Young (since dead) and Coulson, slight flesh and spine wounds, severe. Norfolk Regt.—Wounded: Capt. Luard and Peebles, with slight flesh wounds. South Wales Borderers—Wounded: Capt. Curgenven. Lincoln Regt.—Wounded: Capt. Edwards. Hampshire Regt.—Wounded: Lieut. French. Nature of these wounds not signalled. About 100 rank and file."

President Kruger, in a speech at Pretoria yesterday, stated that the last desire expressed by Gen. Joubert was that Louis Botha should follow him as Commander-General of the Republic.

Message sent by Lord Roberts to President Kruger, on hearing of the death of Gen. Joubert:—

"I have just received the news of Gen. Joubert's death and desire at once to offer my sincere condolence to your Honour and the burghers of the South African Republic on the sad event. I would ask you to convey to Gen. Joubert's family the expression of my most respectful sympathy in their sad bereavement, and to assure them also from me that all ranks of Her Majesty's forces serving in South Africa share my feeling of deep regret at the sudden and untimely end of so distinguished a General, who devoted his life to the service of his country, and whose personal gallantry was only surpassed by his humane conduct and chivalrous bearing under all circumstances."

"ROBERTS."

Sunday, April 1.

Army Order issued at Bloemfontein declaring the title "Free State Railways" to be abolished, and that of "Imperial Military Railways" substituted.

News reached London during the evening of an unfortunate mishap which befel a British force in the neighbourhood of Bloemfontein at dawn yesterday morning, when part of the force under Col. Broadwood, marching from Thaba N'chu, was led into an ambush. The official account was given later from Lord Roberts, thus:—

"Bloemfontein, April 1, 6.10 p.m.

"March 31.—I received news late yesterday afternoon from Broadwood, who was at Thaba N'chu, 38 miles east of this, that information had reached him that the enemy were approaching in two forces from the north and east. He stated that, if the report proved true, he would retire to the Waterworks, 17 miles nearer Bloemfontein, at which place we had a detachment of two companies of Mounted Infantry for the protection of the works. Broadwood was told in reply that the 9th Division, with Martyn's Mounted Infantry, would march at daylight to-day to support him, and that if he considered it necessary he should retire on the Waterworks. He moved there during the night, and bivouacked. At dawn to-day he was shelled by the enemy and attacked on three sides. He immediately despatched his two Horse Artillery batteries and his baggage towards Bloemfontein, covering them with his Cavalry. Some two miles from the Waterworks the road crosses a deep nullah or spruit, in which during the night a force of Boers had concealed themselves. So well were they hidden that our leading scouts passed over the drift without discovering them, and it was not until the waggons and guns were entering the drift that the Boers showed themselves and opened fire. Many of the drivers and artillery horses were at once shot down at short range, and several of the guns were captured. The remainder galloped away covered by Roberts's Horse, which suffered heavily. Meanwhile, Lieut. Chestmaster, of Rimington's Scouts, had found a passage across the spruit unoccupied by the enemy, by which the remainder of Broadwood's force crossed and reformed with great steadiness, notwithstanding all that had previously occurred. Broadwood's report, which has just reached me, and which contains no details, stated that he lost seven guns and all his baggage. He estimates his casualties at about 350, including over 200 missing. On hearing this morning that Broadwood was hard pressed, I immediately ordered French with the two remaining Cavalry Brigades to follow in support of the 9th Division. The latter, after a magnificent march, arrived on the scene of action shortly after two p.m. Broadwood's force consisted of the Household Cavalry, the 10th Hussars, Q and U Batteries the Royal Horse Artillery, and Pilcher's Battalion of Mounted Infantry. The strength of the enemy is estimated at from 8,000 to 10,000 men with guns, the number of which is not yet reported."

Further despatch:—

"Bloemfontein, April 1, 8.15 p.m.

"Referring to previous telegram—In Q Battery Capt. Humphreys, Lieuts. Peck, Ashmore, Murch are wounded, and the two latter are missing. One gunner was (P) killed, 40 non-commissioned officers and men are returned as wounded and missing. Of U Battery all are missing except Major Taylor and the Sergeant-Major.

The battery has lost five guns and Q Battery two. The two cavalry regiments did not suffer so much. A report has just come in that the enemy have retired towards Ladybrand, leaving twelve wounded officers and some seventy men at Waterworks. We are now sending ambulance for them."

Capt. Haldane, Gordon Highlanders, and Lieut. Le Mesurier, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, who escaped some time ago from Pretoria, stated to have arrived at Lorenzo Marques after some rough experiences.

Tuesday, April 3.

Telegraphing from Bloemfontein to-day, the war correspondent of the Daily Mail says Col. Porter, with ninety Carbineers and Greys and two guns, performed a brilliant deed on Sunday. They charged a large body of Boers and rescued ninety-one British prisoners, including eleven officers, who were taken prisoners on Saturday. There were no casualties on our side. Among the rescued men were two Dutch attachés, one of whom was badly wounded by shrapnel. The enemy fled in confusion. Two of the City Imperials, who were lost on the veldt on Saturday, took refuge on a kopje, and next morning attacked six unsuspecting Boers. They killed two of the enemy, seized the horses of the others, and returned.

Friday, April 6.

As we go to press we receive a message from the War Office to the effect that "Lord Methuen telegraphs from Boshof that he has surrounded General Villebois and body of Boers. None escaped. Villebois and seven Boers killed, eight wounded, fifty-four prisoners."

Lord Roberts reports capture by the enemy of a party of infantry near Reddersburg, a little to the east of Bethany Railway Station. The force included three companies 2nd Royal Irish Rifles, two companies 9th Regt. Mounted Infantry. The force is stated to have been surrounded by a strong body of the enemy with five guns. They held out for 21 hours, and only surrendered when all hope was gone.

The situation may be summarised thus:—Lord Roberts's movements are practically paralysed by the want of remounts. The operations since the relief of Kimberley have been very costly in horses, and the hard work imposed on those since hurried to the front has worn out large numbers of them.

The enemy appears to be pushing forward to the south-east. They have occupied Thabanchu, and have been firing on General Brabant's outposts at Wepener. They are also said to have been located near the railway at East Springfontein, where they will probably be engaged very shortly by General Gatacre.

News has been received from Mafeking up to the 23rd ult., and, through Boer sources, as late as last Saturday. Col. Plumer has apparently not been relaxing his efforts to relieve the town, and the Boer commandant Snyman has also been exerting himself to keep the Rhodesians at arm's length. Snyman advanced against him at Lobatsi, but Plumer evacuated the town and made a raid into the Transvaal as far as Zeerust. He appears then to have pushed on to Ramatlabama, but of this movement we have no account from him. According to the Boer reports there was a concerted attack on their position by the Mafeking garrison and Plumer last Saturday. Both attacks are said to have been repulsed, Plumer losing 20 killed and 14 prisoners. These statements, however, require confirmation.

Gen. French has moved from Waterval to Bosman's Kop, which is now the easternmost outpost of Lord Roberts's position.

Twenty thousand Boers are within 20 miles of Bloemfontein. They are still receiving reinforcements and the Free Staters have been re-armed.

Mr. Bennet Burleigh, in a despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Bloemfontein, says:—

"I have visited the remnant of U and Q Batteries R.H.A. All that remains of U is one gun, Major Taylor, a sergeant-major, a shoeing-smith, and a driver, four in all. Major Taylor was actually at the edge of Koor Spruit, and saw the lines of Boers drawn up under the brink. He was called upon to surrender several times, and had to dismount. The Boers were polite, but firm. He moved away among the guns, which were in column, two side by side, to warn Colonel Rochfort, and possibly save Q Battery from coming further on. No one had any suspicion that the Boers were in the spruit, when suddenly firing began, brisk streams of bullets pouring from two directions. The horses were stampeded, either by the fusillade, or else they were flicked by the dismounted drivers. The animals galloped wildly in all directions, until the teams were shot or dropped exhausted."

Q Battery, continues the same correspondent, took advantage of the confusion to gallop off to a distance of 1,200 yds., and then grandly wheeled, engaged the enemy, and fought from about six in the morning until noon. It appears that Major Taylor had a wonderful escape. He walked deliberately away a few yards, and found a horse which had been knocked over his own. This he led by its bridle up to where Q Battery was firing. The greatest hardihood was shown during the fighting by the eight guns. Four of them were served towards the last, two with creman apiece, and the others with but two at each. A fifth gun had several men.

WITH THE ARTILLERY IN NATAL.

By CAPT. C. HOLMES WILSON, R.A.

Ladysmith, March 5.

I beg to send you a few rough notes on some of the deductions to be drawn from the operations for the relief of Ladysmith. They are penned under the disadvantages of campaigning, and I must, therefore, beg that excuses may be made for their crudeness. I only write them in the interests of the Service.

The effect of artillery fire is, perhaps, disappointing. It has scarcely produced that annihilating effect that some of its more ardent supporters have constantly claimed as one of its special characteristics; but then we can scarcely judge the value of some of its peculiar properties at present. The Boer guns have never been massed, and the Boer shells have fortunately been more often blind than not. In the last engagement, however, we had ample proof of what our artillery can do, and it is due to them and the effect of their fire that we are in Ladysmith now. The fight by Monte Cristo, the capture of Hlangwane, and the occupation of Colenso led up to the bombardment of the Pieter's Hill position and the relief of Ladysmith. Colenso, that had defied us, Hlangwane, that had frowned on us, were left smilingly behind, and the Tugela crossed with the feeling that it would no longer be a formidable obstacle across our forward path. It was not, however, till the river had been crossed that the strength of the Boer position could be realised in full. Whether viewed from the Ladysmith road or the kopjes behind Colenso, the difficulties of the task attempted on December 15 were equally plain. Standing in a gun emplacement close to the road, in which the Boers had had two Creusot guns, the plain below could be clearly seen as far as the camp at Chieveley. On the hill there was scarcely a kopje that had not been used for cover, whilst the road was studded with sangars, and the ground below it crossed by trenches, against which it would have been hard to produce very much effect with shrapnel shell. Even under the river bank the ground was hollowed out into holes in which the enemy must have been completely sheltered during the artillery attack. From their side the Boers must have seen every movement on the plain below. The dongas, the tracks, and even stones were clearly visible on the ground across which the column had advanced to Colenso on December 15. In addition to this the windings of the river are enough to deceive the most careful students of the maps, and it is doubtful whether the position of the drifts were perfectly understood when the advance began in the first attack on the Boer position before Colenso.

At the second engagement the situation was reversed. The artillery that had fought at Colenso on December 15 had been supplemented by the addition of a howitzer battery and several other heavy guns, so that the contest on the Tugela on February 27 was a very different action from the one-sided affair that had ended in our retirement two months and a half before. The weight of metal had turned the scale, and experience had taught us how to deal with an enemy whose real strength lay in his extraordinary mobility and the power it gave him in regard to the choice of positions and repulse of flank attacks. To deal with the artillery without praising the infantry would, however, be impossible. The artillery prepared the way for the infantry, but it was the infantry who completed the task and turned the half-finished fight into a victory; it was the infantry who dashed madly on across the bullet-swept plateau towards the trenches from which the death hail was belched forth by the Boers. It was the infantry who held the position when it was captured; it was they who spent the night in sangars without any other cover than their thin khaki; it was they who suffered, and it was they who lost; it was they who stuck to their march, and won us one of the most remarkable battles that has ever been fought by the British Army since Waterloo.

The Boer position was a strong one. Flanked on the left by Cingalo and Monte Cristo, it ran over Hlangwane across the Tugela to Grobler's Kloof on the right. Opposite Colenso a line of low kopjes faces the river, and behind it a higher bank of broken hills shoots out from one of the spurs of Grobler's Kloof, and runs parallel to the stream as far as Monte Cristo, where it culminates in a pointed crag on the opposite bank. Viewed from Chieveley, the Boer position as a whole looked perfect; from right to left it rested on important heights, and in front of Colenso it was protected by the river and flanked by Hlangwane, which was strongly held. It, however, had its weak spot, a spot that even artificial fortification could not overcome. The Tugela divided the position in two; the broad stream, with its mimosa covered banks which sweeps past Colenso in a silvery streak swerves sharply to the left a mile below the town and separates Hlangwane and Cingalo from the kopjes near Colenso and the heights behind them. Consequently, once Cingalo was captured and Monte Cristo turned, Hlangwane stood alone an isolated outpost on the southern bank of a rapidly-running stream. On the other hand, if Hlangwane had been attacked at first the enemy's front would not have been broken, he would still have held the heights on the opposite bank of the river and the hills on our right. Cingalo and Monte Cristo were consequently the points d'appui of the attack—the only keys that were likely to lead to the capture of the position.

On February 14 the battle began with the occupation of Hussar Hill, a low-lying ridge to the south of Monte Cristo and Cingalo. On the 15th we had two 5-inch guns and five naval 12-pounders on Hussar Hill, in addition to the field batteries which were under cover near at hand. The Boers then occupied a flat-topped plateau, which connected Monte Cristo with Hlangwane and formed an important part in their general line of defence. This hill was heavily bombarded on the 16th and the 17th, and on the 18th it and the heights of Monte Cristo, to the right, were carried and the Boer position turned. On the 19th our army wheeled to the left and pressed the enemy back towards the river, and on the 20th the Boers vacated Hlangwane and retired across the Tugela. The first stage of the attack had now been brought to an end, and the way for a further advance prepared. The original Boer position had been turned, the kopjes in front of Colenso rendered untenable, and the enemy pushed across the river. The ground they had vacated was strongly entrenched. Hlangwane itself was a network of entrenchments, and every point of importance had evidently been strongly held. The trenches were very deep and hollowed out on the side next the enemy; the parapets were strengthened by the use of sand-bags, and were strong enough to resist artillery. In these works the Boers must have been absolutely safe from shrapnel fire. They could remain under cover during the artillery preparation, and come out to oppose the advance of the infantry as soon as the general attack began. The trenches themselves were very dirty, while the camps in rear of them were absolutely filthy. When these trenches are seen and their strength considered, the wonders performed by our infantry may be properly understood. No praise is high enough for them.

Throughout this period the part played by the artillery was far from being devoid of interest. The Boers brought up a heavy gun, but removed it as soon as their line of retreat was threatened. The most remarkable feature of their artillery tactics was, however, the successful manner in which they managed to conceal their guns and "pom-poms." The "pom-pom" was always to the fore whenever the infantry attack commenced, and the "pom-pom," though it has never been considered very formidable before, has at present more than earned a reputation fitting it to be classed in the category which covers that miscellaneous collection of pieces usually described as field guns. The "pom-pom" is a remarkable weapon. It has never been seen. It troubles our men more than any field gun the Boers possess, and it embodies all the principles of a quick-firing field gun without possessing any of the disadvantages that have prevented the adoption of this description of matériel in our Service. The knowledge of its existence is demoralising, because our guns have never yet succeeded in putting any particular piece out of action for any length of time, whilst the rapidity of its fire has on more than one occasion led to serious loss. Here we have the quick-firing field gun embodied in a minor degree, and there is not a man who has seen the fighting in Natal who can say that the "pom-pom" is not the most destructive of the destroying weapons—next to the rifle—possessed by the Boers. It is in a lesser degree what we might expect on a larger scale from a properly constructed quick-firing field gun. It can act at the decisive moment—act once, twice, thrice, and yet be ready to act again. Yet, on the other hand, there is no necessity to throw away this power. It is a power that can be nursed and hurled forth at the proper time; it is a power that may repulse an attack or decide a fight; it is a power that we as a nation cannot afford to ignore. If any doubt me, I would beg them consider the other side of the question. If we take our field gun as it is, consider our enemy always as likely to be Boers, who protect themselves by earthworks, see what the result will be. Field guns against earthworks are out of place. If in the future we have to contend in this campaign against an enemy who shelters himself perpetually behind trenches, I say, without hesitation, that the day for 15-pounders has passed. The only way to deal with such a foe as our present is to approach him by parallels in which siege guns have been placed.

In the present war we, of course, can only view the quick-firing question from the opposite side. We have always attacked, and rarely been attacked, except when our infantry have been unsupported, as at Vaal Krantz. Now, it is obvious that it would be useless to use a quick-firing field gun against entrenchments if every shell that was fired was useless. Look at the question from the other side. Take our advance on Colenso on December 15; our attack on the heights to the left of Spion Kop on January 20, or our feint in front of Brakfontein on February 5. In all these cases quick-firing field guns properly placed would have reaped a harvest worth the threshing. Viewing the matter from another standpoint, improvements in firearms have undoubtedly increased the use of cover. Cover is not always easy to find. Cover for a six-gun battery is a rara avis, unless guns are put behind a hill; cover for a few guns is often easily found. If a few guns—say three—can be made to do as much as six, why use the six? It only gives the enemy a larger target. This applies to the attack as well as to the defence. In the defence the Boers have proved to us that a few guns in carefully selected places are hard to silence; in the attack we have seen that batteries have often had to be exposed, whereas a few pieces might have sufficed to provide for all that had to be done. In our lengthy struggles in Natal the artillery duel has often dragged out over days. On some of these days many of the batteries brought into action have never fired a round, though they were liable to be fired on themselves. What was the reason of this? The officers in command were not to blame, but they had to use all their guns whether they were exposed or not, because they could not rely upon a few being able to do the work, though they might have been concealed and kept out of danger. The guns were unequal to the occasion, and if any sudden emergency had arisen they would have failed. The result was that long lines of batteries had often to be exposed when under more favourable circumstances they might have been concealed. The quality of the Boer shell often saved us, though they sometimes managed to secure an "effective" shrapnel fire. There is a strange tendency among our men to shun the use of cover. If you put a soldier on a hill, he will more probably than not stand up. If you put any guns on a kopje they will run up on to the sky line and never think of digging. Give the Boer sufficient time and similar conditions, and he will sneak up under the hill or cover his gun with twigs, and make an epaulment for it besides. In such an unequal contest we are bound occasionally to suffer losses besides those incurred in making attacks. It is difficult to make the Britisher understand anything in the shape of what I may call tricky tactics. He has been taught to do his fighting in a thoroughly straightforward way, and even when his life is at stake he refuses to take advantage of what appear to him to be mean devices. If the relieving force had shown any weakness it would not have been able to fight four pitched battles, one of which lasted for a week, whilst another extended over a period of more than fourteen days. Both, however, have done well, particularly the infantry, whom the nation has every cause to be proud of. As to the remainder of the fighting, I hope you will permit me to describe it later.

Born July 25, 1852, the second son of the late Viscount Gough, his military career began Oct. 28, 1871, when he was appointed Cornet in the 14th Hussars, of which he held the adjutancy for nearly four years until July 23, 1879, when he was promoted Captain. He became Brevet-Major, Nov. 18, 1882; Major, Dec. 16, 1885; Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel, June 15, 1885; Lieutenant-Colonel 14th Hussars, July 1, 1891; Brevet Colonel, Dec. 16, 1889; and substantive Colonel, July 13, 1898. In the Sudan Expedition, where he was in command of the Mounted Infantry, Col. Gough was again mentioned in despatches, having greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Abu Klea, where he was wounded. He vacated his appointment on Lord Wolseley's staff early in the present campaign in order to proceed on service, and was appointed A.A.G. to Lieut.-Gen. French, but he has been holding a more or less independent command. He was one of the most popular officers, and devoted to his profession. Col. FOREIGN.

Ghazi Osman Pacha, the hero of the defence of Plevna, who had been confined to his bed for some time, died Wednesday night at Constantinople. The funeral was solemnised on Thursday with great pomp, several Ministers and State dignitaries being present. The body was interred in the Sultan Mohammed Mosque. The "ever victorious" Osman—"the greatest General of the age," as Skobelev, his famous antagonist, called him—was the most remarkable soldier Turkey has produced in modern times. Born at Amassia, in Epirus, either in 1832 or in 1837, little appears to be known of his origin. Entering the Army at the age of 16, he was a Captain in the Imperial Guard at 20. This rapid promotion was won in the Crimea, where he achieved distinction as a staff officer. He saw no further active service until the Cretan Insurrection. He was then a Colonel, and in 1867 was in command of one of the battalions which suppressed that troublesome outbreak. Another decade of inactivity followed; but in 1876 the great epoch of his life began. When the Turco-Servian War of that year broke out, he was given the command of a division, and achieved considerable distinction by his capture of Zibchar. Hardly had he time to recover from the fatigues of the campaign, when in April, 1877, Russia declared war against Turkey. In July he was placed in command at Plevna. The town commanded the junction of several roads which it was of vital importance that Russia should be able to pass. So long as the Turks held it, a further advance was impossible. Osman Pacha had with him 40,000 men, with a large complement of guns; but Plevna was not, properly speaking, fortified. General Schildner-Schulder endeavoured, on July 20, to capture Plevna with a brigade of infantry, but was cut to pieces. By this time Osman had been reinforced, and when the second battle was fought, eleven days later, he had under his command about 60,000 men. From the moment of his arrival his troops had been hard at work constructing earthworks, redoubts, and shelter-trenches, and in a few days the town had become practically impregnable. An entire Russian Army Corps, a Division and a Brigade, with three Brigades of Cavalry, and 160 guns, advanced towards Plevna on July 31, with results which fully justified Gen. Krüdner's protest against any attempt to take it by storm. The assailants were completely defeated, with a loss of 16,000 killed and wounded. A month later Osman made a desperate attack, supported by 25,000 men, against the Russian left centre, but lost 3,000 men and was driven back. In September the Prince of Roumania had taken the command before Plevna, having under him 75,000 men and 442 guns, and on Sept. 7 the preliminary bombardment of Osman's position began. On the 11th an assault was delivered, which resulted in the capture of the formidable Grivitza Redoubt, which cost the Russians and Roumanians 15,000 men. On the 18th an attempt was made upon the second Grivitza Redoubt, but the Turkish fire was so terrific that Prince Charles was compelled to withdraw. It now became clear that it was hopeless to attempt to capture Plevna by a frontal attack, and it was decided to undertake a siege. Todleben was sent for, and by the middle of November Osman was completely cut off from the outer world. The siege lasted for nearly five months. On the night of Dec. 9 Osman left Plevna, crossing the river Vid, with 26,000 Infantry and 6,000 Cavalry. The Russians had been warned by their spies and were prepared; yet at first the Turks scored some successes, and broke through the first circle of the besiegers. The Russians rallied, and in a short time the fate of the beleaguered army was sealed, and shortly after noon on the 10th the white flag was hoisted over Plevna. Osman himself was wounded in the leg, and his horse was killed under him. Osman's sword was returned to him as a tribute to his magnificent defence—it was, the Grand Duke Nicholas told him, "one of the most splendid military feats in history." When peace came he was made War Minister, a post which he held for many years, and afterwards Marshal of the Palace. During the Greco-Turkish war he was nominated to a high command, but never really took the field.

21st Lancers.—The medals granted by the Queen for the Khartoum Expedition were presented to the regiment at church parade at the Curragh on Sunday by Major-Gen. Upton Prior, commanding the district. Before distributing the medals Gen. Prior addressed the Lancers, eulogising their gallantry and expressing a hope that officers and men would long be spared to wear the decorations so worthily earned. During the presentation the non-commissioned officers and men who particularly distinguished themselves during the campaign were brought to the notice of the General. The officers receiving medals were: Lieut.-Col. Crole Wyndham, C.B., Major Eadon, Capt. Cordeaux, Capt. and Adj. Clerk, Lieuts. Nesham and Brinton, and Capt. and Qrmr. Graham. The total number of medals was 346.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Four more field batteries were added to the establishments of the regiment yesterday, the 128th, 129th, and 130th being in course of formation at Brighton, and the 131st at Chatham.

Two new companies of Garrison Artillery have been formed from the 1st inst.: the No. 31, Eastern Division, at Shoeburyness, and No. 31, Western Division, at Plymouth.

Sergt. Booley (Bodley?), who lost an arm and a leg at Ladysmith on Jan. 6, and was mentioned for his splendid act of gallantry by Sir George White in his recent speech at Cape Town, left that place on Sunday, in the German, for England. Before the steamer sailed, the Mayor and a few leading citizens hurriedly and unostentatiously collected £350 and sent it to him on board, together with a letter expressing their admiration of his heroism, of which the whole regiment of Royal Artillery may well be proud.

THE MAGAZINES.

So great is the pressure upon our space that we shall deal at the moment very briefly with the magazines, though nearly all of them contain a good deal that is interesting. We shall find an opportunity of dealing elsewhere with certain special articles of military interest in the Nineteenth Century, Blackwood, and perhaps some others of the monthlies. The first named magazine is, indeed, full of suggestive articles, including contributions from Sir George Clarke, Mr. Arnold Forster, M.P., Mr. W. S. Lilly, and others. Mr. H. W. Wilson, writing from the point of view of the Navy League, asks:—"Are we mislead about the Fleet?" He has no hesitation in saying, in view of the hostility of the Continent, that something must be done, and he has very little patience with Mr. Goschen's failure to carry out the shipbuilding programme for the last three years. The Navy League has interrogated shipbuilders and armourplating manufacturers and has proved that our building sources are not exhausted. Again, in regard to readiness for war, Mr. Wilson is alarmed at the irresponsibility of the Admiralty Board, and he concludes by alluding to quite a number of matters which may be regarded as defects, but which happily are remediable. The Earl of Camperdown expresses very strongly the feeling that the Boers must pay for the war, whether they be embodied in the British Empire or not, and Canon Wirgman, of Grahamstown, contributes a second article upon the question of settlement, writing in a tone of great hostility to the Boers and proclaiming that our cause is righteous and true, and that we are waging a holy war in the cause of freedom and justice. The Nineteenth Century has also an interesting article upon the French Army, by M. Paul Bettelheim, which presents a picture very different from that offered by MM. Gohier and Dècle.

An anonymous writer in Blackwood takes for his subject Russia's sea power, basing his remarks largely upon what Sir George Clarke has written, but being convinced of the deeply-rooted hostility which Russia manifests towards us, and that there must be no vacillating, halting, or half-and-half policy on our part. Under the title of "The Riders of the Plains," Mr. C. Hanbury-Williams gives an excellent account of his experiences in the North-west territory of Canada among the rough-riders, of whom he gives a splendid account, leaving no doubt that they will make excellent soldiers. The military critic continues his discussion on the war in South Africa.

In the United Service Magazine Mr. O'Connor Morris concludes his account of Marlborough. Major John Macartney writes suggestively about the value of Mounted Infantry and the method of equipping and employing them. Major A. C. Yate is loud in his praise of the excellent spirit shown by the nation in the war, which, he rightly says, will be a great lesson to foreigners. His article embodies something of an attack upon the Press, which seems to us to be unnecessary. Lieut.-Gen. F. H. Tyrrell continues his account of the French Army under the Empire. Other military articles are upon the Chinese Army, the last French charge of Waterloo, by Lieut.-Col. E. M. Lloyd, and the Canadian Factor in Imperial Defence, by Capt. William Wood, of the Canadian Militia. There is an important naval article by Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel upon the question of steamship training. He is an unflinching advocate of the employment of masted training squadrons, and says most emphatically that the discipline of masts and sails must not be given up until an efficient substitute is found, which is not yet the case.

We have also received Macmillan's Magazine, in which there is an exceedingly interesting contribution in the shape of a letter written at the time by Sir Humphrey Senhouse, describing the battle of Trafalgar, which he witnessed as lieutenant on board the Conqueror, and all who are interested in the great action should read what that officer wrote; the Cornhill, in which Lieut.-Col. F. N. Maude has an article on "Mistake in War," pointing out to the man in the street that Sir Redvers Buller, Sir George White, Sir William Gatacre, and others have not escaped the common lot of military commanders; and also the Pall Mall Magazine, which is of average excellence. A good number of the Badminton; Longman's containing much that is interesting; Harper's Magazine and the Century, both of them in many ways excellent, though a little unequal; the Genealogical Magazine, the Antiquary, and the Humanitarian.

The Journal of the Royal United Service Institution for March, is a very good number. It contains the lectures of Major A. C. Yate on "Sixty Years of Frontier Warfare," and of Mr. Fred Jane on the "Tactics of His War Game," as well as two valuable translations, and an exceedingly interesting set of naval and military notes. The translations we refer to are the following:—"How is Fire Superiority to be Attained in the Infantry Attack," by Lieut.-Gen. Von Rohne, from the Militär Wochenblatt by Mr. F. H. A. Bex, and an "Introduction to the Study of Naval Tactics," by Capt. Nepvou de Carfort, rendered from the Revue Maritime, by Fleet-Engineer T. J. Haddy, R.N.

SHORT NOTICES.

We have received Outlines of French History, by J. A. Joerg, one of the instructors at the well-known establishment at Earl's Court Square (Swan Sonnenschein and Company) being a capital little volume for use in schools and for private study; A Compendious German Reader, especially Adapted for the use of Army classes, by G. B. Beak, M.A. (Blackwood and Sons), wherein is an excellent selection of extracts from German authors, mostly concerning military and political events for translation at sight, being "German Historical Unseens," with an outline of German History; Select Passages from Modern French authors, compiled by L. E. Kastner, B.A. (same publishers), forming two volumes for junior and advanced pupils; Virgil-Georgics, Book IV., by George Sergeaut, M.A. (same publishers), an addition to the series of "Blackwood's Classical Texts"; News of the World Almanac and Encyclopedia, 1900 (30, Bouverie Street), a volume packed full of miscellaneous information, political and general; and a Key to the Apocalypse by H. G. Guinness, D.D. (Hodder and Stoughton).

We have also a good deal of minor war literature upon our table. M. Naville, the eminent Egyptologist, has published a brochure concerning the war for the information of his Swiss countrymen, and his able pamphlet has been translated under the title of the Transvaal Question from a Foreign Point of View (Blackwood). Such calm and statesmanlike writing should be calculated to remove something of the unreasonable prejudice felt against us abroad, and Professor Naville entirely refuses to have the Transvaal compared with his own Switzerland. Our South African Empire and How We Made It, by Arthur Goodrich (Pearson) is a satisfactory little volume, more historical than political, which should be useful at the present time. The Absent-Minded Mule and other Occasional Verses by T. W. H. Crosland (7, Cecil Court, W.C.), is a bright book of small dimensions. The piece which gives it its title is, of course, a parody upon "The Absent-Minded Beggar," and is really very clever, and some other verses upon the same lines, both instructive and amusing, are included. Several of the pieces have already appeared in The Outlook, and there is a good deal of sparkling wit, irony, and cynical satire in what Mr. Crosland writes. British War Songs (Sheard and Co.) published at 1s., contains many old favourites, with some things that are new and have won modern popularity. We have received, from the Glasgow Book and Stationery warehouse, a very neat khaki-coloured leather pocket writing case, containing letter cards and an indelible pencil, with pocket for papers, admirably adapted for the use of soldiers and sailors in the field.

ROYAL ARTILLERY PROMOTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR.—The letter in your paper of this date from "Anxious Father" is very much to the point. Is there no Service member in the Commons who will call the attention of the Secretary of State for War to the injustice of keeping 2nd Lieutenants in the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery for three years in that rank, notwithstanding the number of vacancies existing in the rank of Lieutenant? It certainly is an act of injustice that these young officers should be superseded by so many linesmen, Militiamen, and Yeomanry. We know the state of chaos at the War Office—where the Royal Artillery is unrepresented, the post of A.G. for Artillery having been abolished last year. And nothing from there may be expected in the form of redress; but I hope that other parents, as well as myself, will give utterance to their dissatisfaction, and it may possibly have some good result.

MUSKETRY IN 1899.

The annual report of Lieut.-Colonel Hopton Acting Commandant at Hythe, is on the whole satisfactory on the musketry training of the Regular forces serving at home, including the School of Musketry, the Militia, Yeomanry Cavalry, and Volunteers during the year 1899. The average regimental figure of merit in the cavalry was 77 (an aggregate) for the compulsory individual firing, and 34 (a percentage) for the compulsory collective practices. The average battalion figure of merit in the infantry was 90 (an aggregate) for the individual, and 50 (a percentage) for the collective. The results generally are pronounced "very satisfactory."

As regards the Militia, Col. Hopton maintains that no real progress in musketry can be expected from this force, whilst the time allowed for the training is so short and the amount of work expected from the Militiaman in that short time is so extensive. The present average battalion figure of merit, 38 for individual and 37 for collective, is only regarded as fairly satisfactory but the fault does not rest with officers and men. In the case of the Yeomanry the results are classed as "satisfactory." Col. Hopton adding that, from a musketry standpoint, he would like to see the whole force turned into mounted infantry and armed with the rifle instead of the carbine, a view which many have with him.

Among the Volunteers trained, 37,266, or 26 per cent., were classified as marksmen, 20,780, or 15 per cent., as first-class shots, 79,526, or 59 per cent., as second-class shots, and 219, or below 1 per cent., remained in the third class. No detailed remarks on the training of the Volunteers during the past year are submitted, owing to the extensive changes which are to be introduced next season, and which include the doubling of the 21 rounds which are now compulsory. Col. Hopton anticipates a great improvement in the musketry efficiency of the Volunteers from these changes, and is quite confident that Volunteer commanding officers will have no difficulty in meeting the additional requirements of Government. Considerable emphasis is laid on the benefit likely to accrue from the new system coming into force this year, by which non-commissioned officers of Militia and Volunteers, other than permanent staff, are to be allowed to go through courses at the Hythe School of Musketry. In relation to field firing, a special note is added to the effect that great credit is due to many Volunteer battalions for the time and trouble expended by them in their efforts to carry out this important musketry practice.

In the course of his general report, Col. Hopton makes some interesting remarks as to the probable value of the South African campaign from a musketry point of view. It is, he observes, already apparent from information received of the shooting by our men in this war that musketry generally must have made vast strides in the interval which has elapsed since the last time we were engaged with an enemy in that part of the world. No doubt some of this improvement is due to the better shooting powers of the Lee-Netford and Lee-Enfield rifles as compared with the Martini-Henry, but the chief improvement is due to the far greater care and trouble now taken with musketry training throughout the Army, and to the great advance made in the fire discipline of all ranks. Many points will be most interesting to note in this connection. For instance, what kind of fire was most generally used and found most effective, whether "individual," "independent," or "volley;" also what were the most generally adopted "positions"—i.e., "standing," "kneeling," "sitting," or "lying;" at what distances most of the firing took place, and whether long-range fire was much used and found effective; the uses to which machine guns were put, and their general behaviour; what revolvers were found the most suitable; also whether the present bayonet was much used and found to answer well, etc.

This celebrated Firm, whose business extends back to 1750 (over 150 years ago), when it was first started by William Frodsham, has a world-wide reputation for the excellence of the Watches supplied by them, which are of the finest workmanship and finish. With the aid of machinery and modern appliances Watches can now be manufactured at much less cost than heretofore; and Messrs. G. E. Frodsham & Co. can now supply first-class English Watches in Crystal, Full or Demi Hunting 18-carat cases, at £20, or similar movements in Sterling Silver Cases, at £25 5s. (see Illustration). It is well known that the fact of a Watch having Frodsham's name upon it enhances the value about 20 per cent. All other kinds of Watches up to £300 can be found in the fully illustrated and descriptive Catalogue, which will be sent post free upon application by their Sole Agents—

THE NAVY AND THE COLONIES.

THE publication of the naval despatches reporting the proceedings of the Naval Brigades in the Cape Colony and with General Buller, makes it all the more odd that there should have been hesitation in giving them to the country. Apparently the actual cause of the delay was merely another manifestation of the red tape which rules at the War Office. Also, from a reply made by Mr. Wyndham in Parliament, there is a difference in regard to the naval and military procedure customary in these matters. Whereas in the Navy each officer in command makes his own report, and the whole of these despatches are forwarded to the Admiralty with a covering letter from the senior officer, it is usual in the Army for the senior officer to re-write the reports of his juniors, and to keep back from the War Office their individual communications. As to which is the better way, we should think there could be no question. There is not much that is new in regard to the despatches reporting the proceedings in Cape Colony.

Captain Prothero begins the story, Captain Marchant, of the Marines, takes it up from the time when Captain Prothero was wounded, and Lieutenant Dean supplements their accounts with a description of the action on his guns on the left of the position. The Flag-Captain mentions as an illustration of the terribly heavy fire with which the Brigade was met at Graspan that he saw on several occasions a man hit more than once, and as many as three times before he reached the ground. Lieutenant Dean's explanation of why it was he had only six men wounded, and Lieutenant's Ogilvy's commendation of his guns' crews at the battle of Colenso, are incidental word pictures of the highest value. It is to be hoped that we shall not have to wait as long for the further Naval despatches as we have had in this instance. That from Captain Lambton describing the defence of Ladysmith should assuredly be issued not later than next week.

The determination of the Naval authorities to reduce the number of seamen and Marines ashore in South Africa is obvious; but beyond a notice affecting certain of the officers of the Powerful no official intimation to this effect has been issued. It is rather interesting in this connection to see that both from Australia and from New Zealand members of Naval Volunteer corps are serving at the front with mounted troops. The circumstance is one that naturally recalls attention to the subject upon which Lord Brassey wrote a letter to the Times last week. But while his lordship asks for a further consideration of the proposal of the Naval conference held at Melbourne, he does not suggest any clear course for avoiding the difficulties with which the project bristles. It seems to us that, if it were possible, it would be a simple solution of the problem to arrange that the colonies make their contribution to defence other than naval. It has been shown by the course of this war in South Africa that it is necessary and essential to an adequate protection of Imperial interests that we should have a very much larger army than has hitherto been thought necessary. The colonies have shown, too, that they are perfectly competent and ready to supply a large proportion of such an army. If Canada, New South Wales, and the other self-governing colonies were each to maintain a military force of which one portion was always ready for service, while by means of Militia and Volunteer systems expansion could quickly take place, the need for a large increase of the Army at home might be, at least in part, obviated. There would then be less reason to add to the Army Estimates by so many millions, while the assistance thus given by the colonies would be looked upon as their contribution in kind to Imperial defence. The Navy would remain an Imperial force binding and connecting the parts of the Empire together, but wholly paid for at home, and directed from the Admiralty. The sons of colonial born citizens would still be welcomed in the ships as officers or men, and, indeed, entry might be simplified. On the other hand, the need for increased land forces would have been met, and in a manner which would in all probability commend itself more highly to the colonies at large than any scheme by which they they could provide a Naval Reserve. If, too, some arrangement could be made by which the colonies could assist to officer the Marines and draw their military instructors and commandants from this force, another troublesome difficulty might be surmounted. We claim for these suggestions that they are entirely novel, that they offer a medium of settlement which should be satisfactory to all members of the partnership, and that they might provide on an economical basis an effective fleet and that efficient Army for general service over sea which is now recognised as an essential factor in Imperial defence.

FRENCH NAVAL POLICY.

IT is not often that the historian descends into the arena to demonstrate in a practical fashion the lessons which his researches may bear. Even Professor Seeley and Captain Mahan were content to allow the teachings of history almost to enforce themselves; and, if we recognise the practical bearing of what they have written, it is not so much because of a didactic method employed, as through the masterful skill and convincing force with which their subjects have been presented. Captain Chevalier, the French naval historian, adopts a method more direct and argumentative. His books upon the Navy of France under the Consulate and the Empire are well known, and MM. Hachette have just published from his pen a third and concluding work, bringing up the story to the present time. In the last chapter of the new book there is a philosophical treatment of the question of naval war, and in particular of war between France and England. Captain Chevalier recognises that we have almost always been largely superior in strength, and his purpose is to discover what should be the policy of a weak Navy confronted with one that is strong. Our object has been in war to seek out and destroy the enemy wherever he might be found; what should be the rôle of a Power too weak to undertake like operations? This is the question that has divided the minds of Frenchmen, that has thrown them into the arms of conflicting schools, and that is largely responsible for the want of homogeneity in their fleet. Captain Chevalier holds that it is really to the advantage of England, having defeated the main force of her opponent, to prolong a war; and it is worth while to note that just the same view is expressed in the preamble to the new German Navy Bill, which demands peace at sea—"not peace at any price, but peace with honour."

Captain Chevalier insists that a defensive policy is imposed upon France, but it is to be a defensive policy accompanied at the very outset, and then more than at any other time, by determined aggressive action against our commerce. He clearly sees that trade is the life-blood of England, and that the only hope of France must rest in her attempt to destroy it. He demonstrates this thesis at great length and with much sagacity. The object must be to avoid useless battles, to attack only when there is decisively superior force, and to carry on a sustained commercial war. "So long as the weaker Navy is in a position to attempt important operations, England, ignorant of its projects and unaware of its particular aims, will be obliged to maintain an adequate force to watch or blockade the ships remaining in port, and to pursue them if they attempt to get out; and, in these conditions, England will be incapable of operating on land as effectively as if she had all her forces at her disposal." It might be supposed from what has been said that Captain Chevalier advocates the guerre de course, but this would imperfectly indicate his view. He recognises that a battle fleet is essential to France, for he points out that the success which attended the operations of Jean Bart, Surcouf, and their comrades, was in proportion to the strength of the French Navy, which made their achievements possible. To fight a battle for the sake of fighting, in the words of Vauban echoed by Captain Chevalier, is "a vanity." The historian proceeds to indicate that it is very important for a Navy that is weak to have ships that are strong, and therefore French ships must be proportionately stronger than ours. He may therefore be regarded as a supporter of the policy now proclaimed at the Ministry of Marine, where it is alleged that the new ships will be individually superior in all respects to any we possess.

Navy Notes.

Although, owing to the threatening appearance of the weather, the Royal yacht crossed the Irish Channel rather earlier than was originally intended, the ships of the Channel Squadron in Dublin Bay were not caught napping. No sooner did the Victoria and Albert with her naval escort appear in sight than the vessels were dressed and the salute followed as usual. In the evening also, the illumination of the squadron was watched with interest by a very large number of spectators on the shore. A correspondent of the Daily Telegraph thus describes the scene:—"With dramatic, startling suddenness the whole fleet was outlined in soft amber lights, and stood in dazzling brightness against the sky; the outline was perfect, hulls, spars, funnels, fighting tops, conning towers, were all traced in exquisite glowing outline, flashing and dancing with the slight swell there was outside. It was easy to distinguish the stately lines of the Magnificent and Majestic, even had there not been the Admiral's flags ablaze in red and white. Then a pretty sight followed. Rockets were fired from the ships, and a long procession of boats passed round the harbour. Presently the lights became red, and round the harbour the procession circled, making a beautiful serpentine curve of crimson flame, which was caught and reflected in the water. It was a charming evolution, carried out with all the neatness and precision of the 'handy man.'"

Sir William White has been down to Portsmouth to have a look at the new Royal yacht, and as a result, the work is being pushed on with great rapidity. As we supposed, the statement that the yacht had been condemned for purposes of Royalty, and was to be converted to Admiralty uses, is inaccurate. The alterations now being made, will, we understand, have the effect of improving not only the seaworthiness, but the beauty of the vessel. It is anticipated that she will be ready for her steam trials in about two months' time, and these will be of an exhaustive character, involving seven or eight runs at $17\frac{1}{2}$ knots and upwards for periods of from forty-eight to eight hours at full power. There are to be two runs of forty-eight hours each, each of $17\frac{1}{2}$ knots, and should the second trial prove a failure the first trial will, after the necessary readjustments, be run again. The same principle will be observed in each set of trials. According to the latest estimate, the yacht will not be ready for sea earlier than next February.

From the answer which Mr. Goschen has given to Sir C. Cameron, it is evident that, as we assumed last week, the statement about a fire in the magazine of one of H.M. ships referred to the occurrence which took place on board the Revenge. This matter was mentioned by the First Lord in reply to Admiral Field early in February, but it does not appear that the cause of the explosion has so far been satisfactorily explained. It is certainly startling enough that a cordite cartridge should spontaneously ignite, setting fire to others in the same box, even although the other boxes of cartridges in the magazine were not affected. It would be interesting to learn what time is supposed to have elapsed between the moment of ignition and the discovery of what had occurred, since it is evident that this must have considerable bearing upon the question of whether the result might not have been much worse. From Mr. Goschen's answer it is evident that there is not the slightest atom of foundation whatever for the imputation that this occurrence was due to hurried manufacture to meet the present demands. The cordite which ignited was made as long ago as 1894, and there was no new cordite on board the Revenge. Mr. Goschen said further that the position of the Navy as regards the supply of cordite had not been such as to require the placing of any special or hurried orders, but he did not explain the effect of the War Office borrowing upon the reserve for the Fleet. It is satisfactory, however, to learn that orders for 1899-1900 were placed in June last, and those for the current year will be placed almost immediately. Presumably, therefore, the material which is known to have been made in a hurry is to be used in South Africa.
